

The Weekly Caucasian.

EVERING REVIEWS. BY MISS J. B. FROST. From the True Flag.

Field winds are soft, changing from the north to the east. The sun is shining brightly. The birds are singing in the trees. The flowers are in bloom.

TRUTH IN PARENTHESIS. BY THE FOREIGNER. I have more than you can tell. I am not a man of words.

A Delicate Husband. Our friend George B. Griffith, of Newmarket, N. H., is responsible for the following story: and a good one it is!

A Rank Kiss. A noble lord, who was extremely vain, and very parsimonious, sold the produce of his dairy and orchard to the peasantry.

The lucky father was very solicitous regarding his dear companion's state, and up to the last hour; but when informed that all was over, and he was invited to congratulate Mrs. S.

Curiosities of Humanity.

Some authors or other wrote himself mind, as we have heard, on the "Curiosities of Literature."

The husband that says to his wife on a Monday night, when the cook is in revolt, "I am looking out for the curiosities of humanity."

The man who expands as much pains upon her toilet on a rainy morning when there is no one but John at the breakfast table, as does the cook in preparing her old sweetheart's going to call!

The woman that tells her husband how much money she spent in that expedition yesterday.

The man who is always delighted with domestic puddings and pies, and don't expect a daily fill of fare like unto a French restaurant.

The woman who don't look into all the envelopes in her husband's vest, when she sends that garment!

The man who never saw a collar pattern that fit so much better than his ever did.

The woman who can't tell the color of her neighbor's new bonnet!

Our brains are seventy year clocks. The angel of life winds them up once for all, then loses the key, and gives the key to the hand of the angel of the resurrection.

Not many years ago there lived, in a small town in the interior of Vermont, a queer and extremely timid clergyman, one not over burdened with some sense within, by the name of Elmspool.

Said genius, to his surprise, and the infinite astonishment of his acquaintances, picked up sufficient courage, at the age of forty, to get married.

He proved a very dutiful and obedient husband; but his timidity and extreme carelessness proved the bane of many a joke, and always solely at his own expense.

In the course of time, as is often the case, his good lady was taken ill, and the result was a fine healthy, Stupid junior.

A noble lord, who was extremely vain, and very parsimonious, sold the produce of his dairy and orchard to the peasantry.

The lucky father was very solicitous regarding his dear companion's state, and up to the last hour; but when informed that all was over, and he was invited to congratulate Mrs. S.

PROSPECTUS OF THE WEEKLY CAUCASIAN.

Salutatory. We herewith present to the public the first number of "THE CAUCASIAN."

The intention and desire of the proprietors is to render the paper a valuable and welcome visitor in the hands of all who may favor it with their patronage.

We hope our friends will feel their privilege, if not duty, to give our paper kindly "an end and comfort," by some effort to extend its circulation.

The President's Proclamation and Western Virginia. Careful readers of the peace proclamation of President Johnson will have noticed the cautious manner in which he refers to Western Virginia.

There is where we derive the name. And is it not appropriate and suggestive? We think so. We are Caucasian in blood, in birth, and in prejudice, and do not expect to labor to place above us in the scale of civilization, in morality, in usefulness, in religion, in the arts and sciences, in mechanics, either the Mongolian, the Indian, or the Negro.

Our own variety—we shall labor. Let the Mongolian, the Red Man, and the Negro do likewise, as God has given him the ability, and the opportunity. If we are not marked like the Caucasian, then we are not of that family.

If we are not entitled, as compared with the other varieties, then there is a mistake in history, to be corrected only by a constitutional amendment.

From this noble race has sprung all that we have, in every department of science, trade, navigation and the useful arts. The designation includes all, excludes none, who belong to this distinct variety. God meant something, we suppose, when He created our first parents white.

He delegated to them certain rights. Among these, were intellect of a higher order than has been transmitted from them to any other tribe, and most nobly have they sustained and acquitted themselves of the important charge.

The same power, if given to the other varieties of the human family, have languished—not in slavery, as some latter-day philanthropists would urge, but in inebriety and imbecility. They have produced nothing—done nothing—and it is a strong argument against their ability to do.

They have not kept up. Their opportunities were of their own choosing or God's disposing, and while the white man has been busily employed in a development of the rich legacy left to him, they have been content to occupy a secondary position, and accept of the manifold benefits wrought out by their better—(better because of their intellect)—and more fortunate neighbors.

We claim nothing for the race that is not entitled to; nor do we suppose there are those of that family who will condemn themselves, in the face of facts, to award to others a meed of praise which they do not deserve, and have not labored to achieve.

God left the world in a state of nature, and he implanted in man—in white men—a desire to conquer and enjoy it. He commanded them to multiply and fill the earth; he gave them the mastery over all things—the beasts of the field, the birds of the air, and the leviathan, that huge monster of the deep. Who shall say they have not kept and discharged the trust. To the white man, the world is indebted for countless blessings—more than we could enumerate in the space of a column. But they are patent to all. They have gone forward conquering and to conquer. They have discovered and peopled continents; hewn down great forests, thus making room for a better civilization than that found to exist among the aborigines, where any existed, giving them the advantages and gains of Caucasian intellect and Caucasian genius.

They have lessened distance between points far removed from each other, until we are but ten or twelve days travel to the most important places in Europe; and when the wires shall be laid across the Atlantic, now admitted to be both feasible and possible, distance will no longer lend enchantment to the view. To that noble race we are indebted for the type we now use; for gunpowder and its application; for steam and its application; for schools and colleges; for boats and sea-going vessels; and for all else that has not fallen directly from the hands of the Creator. The Caucasian has kept alive and burning the pure flame of religion, and blessed parts of the world, as commanded, to most of it, and he is still pushing the conquest of the cross to other, remote shores, but by dint of his energy and perseverance, to be as accessible as London, or Paris, or Constantinople, or Pekin. What need has such a race for an admixture of blood? It would be a dangerous experiment. It might do, and it might not. Let him push forward. Anon his influence will be felt and acted upon by races inferior in intellect and industry, and it may be, urge them forward in the line that has been so well laid down by the Caucasian.

Transcript. The Maine Farmer says that the fall is the best time to set out apple trees. The Farmington Chronicle insists that in our climate the spring is the best time. Speaking of apple trees we are reminded that now is the time to remove the eggs of the caterpillars from the twigs. They will be found in dark, pitchy tings, and a little search for them will be well repaid.—Fortnightly Transcript.

The Caucasian.

We are so frequently asked why we chose the above title for our paper, in preference to some more common and more significant title, that we have concluded to answer the inquiry thus publicly, as a saving of time, and perhaps prove the means of a more extended piece of information.

As to the common-place title, we remark that we considered all of them hacknied and inappropriate; and that as suggestive of its character or caste, we know of no name that covers the case, and answers so well as the one chosen.

We herewith append the description of the Caucasian, or White Man, from the new American Cyclopaedia: "The Caucasian race is one of the five varieties into which mankind was divided by Blumenbach. It is also one of the three varieties in the classification of Cuvier, one of the fifteen species of that of Bory de St. Vincent, and appears in other classifications. According to Blumenbach it is the central and original race from which the others have been produced. Its characteristics are a white complexion, reddish chest, not brown hair, round head, oval face, with regular features, even brow, thin and regularly curved nose, small mouth, perpendicular front teeth, and full round chin. It embraces the most powerful and enlightened nations of the world, and its general external appearance is such that Melians, recognized by two races of men, or Caucasian, or beautiful, and the Mongolian, or ugly. To it belong all the ancient and modern Europeans, excepting the Finnish tribes, the Indians, Persians, Phoenicians, Hebrews, Arabs, and other tribes of Western Asia, and the Egyptians, Abyssinians, Grecians, and other inhabitants of North Africa."

There is where we derive the name. And is it not appropriate and suggestive? We think so. We are Caucasian in blood, in birth, and in prejudice, and do not expect to labor to place above us in the scale of civilization, in morality, in usefulness, in religion, in the arts and sciences, in mechanics, either the Mongolian, the Indian, or the Negro.

Our Own Column.

The term Creole is a corruption of the Spanish Criollo, which signifies one born in America or the West Indies, of European Ancestors. An erroneous idea prevails in many places that a Creole must have in his veins admixture, greater or less, of negro blood. This so far from being true, is entirely wrong. In the far South and in Cuba the term is applied only to those who are of French or Spanish descent, and it is the proudest boast of these people that they are Creole. In the British West Indies the term is applied indiscriminately to all colors, and the blacks are called Creole or West Indian negroes, to distinguish them from those brought from Africa by the slavers.
