VAST COAL RESERVE.

United States Has Exhausted Only One-Half of One Per Cent of Available Supply.

The known coal fields of the United States embrace a total area, according to the United States Geological Survey, of 310,296 square miles, of which may be added something over 160,000 square miles of which little is known, but which may contain workable coals, and about 32,000 square miles where the coal lies under heavy cover and is not considered available under present conditions. The supply of coal before mining began is estimated to have been 3,076,204,000,000 short tons, of which 1,922,979,000,000 tons were considered to be easily accessible and 1,153,225,000,000 short tons to be either so deep or the beds so thin that they are accessible only with difficulty. Classified according to the character of the coal, the original supply consisted of 21,000,000,000 short tons of anthracite, 1,861,457,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, and 743,580,000,000 tons of lignite, the supply of bituminous coal being something more than that of all other grades combined.

The total production of coal to the close of 1911 has amounted to 2,270,798,737 short tons of anthracite and 6,468,773,690 tons of bituminous coal, or an aggregate of 8,739,572,427 tons. This total production to the close of 1911 represents, including the waste of coal in mining, an exhaustion of the beds equal to 14,181,980,000 short tons, or somewhat less than 0.5 per cent of the original supply. In other words, the quantity of coal still remaining to be mined amounts to 3,062,022,020,000 short tons, or a little more than 99.5 per cent of the original supply. The annual rate of exhaustion at the present time as represented by the production in 1910 and 1911 is 0.025 per cent of the supply. The quantity of coal still in the ground at the close of 1911 was 6000 times the production of that year, or estimating a half ton of coal lost for every ton recovered, the supply is equivalent to 4000 times the present annual rate of exhaustion.

Third Grade.

Catechism—T. Bacala, Louis Goette, Claud Hernandez, John Landry, Edward LeBlanc, Louis Marsala, Allen Mattingly, Elmo Melancon, Wallace Messina, Armand Richard, Edward Zimmer, Treille Escheault, Chilton Causin.

The Advertiser's Creed.

I believe in publicity and in every legitimate method of catching the eye and reaching the ear of any possible customer.

I believe that repetition must result in emphasis, that emphasis must in time attract attention, that attention must create interest, that interest must yield orders.

I believe that the way to sell goods is to advertise them, to talk straight and to talk honest.

I believe that the market is as big as the world, that a slice of it belongs to me, that my goods are worthy of it and that I am going to get it.—Waterways Journal.

A MERITED TRIBUTE.

George B. Reuss, Merchant, Planter and Progressive Citizen, Given Credit for Inception of St. Elmo-Belle Helene Railroad Project.

The following complimentary mention of one of Ascension's leading citizens, accompanied by an excellent photographic likeness of the gentleman in question, appeared in the last issue of the St. Elmo-Belle Helene Bulletin:

"When the St. Elmo railroad has been completed, put into operation, and pronounced a flattering success, a great many people will be found claiming the biggest part of the credit for this substantial achievement. Right now, while the thing is young, the Bulletin wants to put George B. Reuss, of Hohn Solms and Belle Helene, on record as deserving the largest percentage of credit for the inception of the railroad plan and the completion of its many details.

"Mr. Reuss is known in Ascension parish as one of its most progressive citizens. His various business activities give employment to many persons, and he is always to the forefront in any movement that tends to develop and improve the section of the country. Mr. Reuss was a pioneer in the work of bringing enterprising, industrious northern and western farmers to settle on Louisiana soil. This introduction of new blood is having a stimulating effect on our home people, and is doing more than anything else to bring back to the majority of our population an inclination toward farm life, the absence of which has been such a great factor in the overcrowding of our cities and the depopulation of rural communities.

"To his splendid qualities as a business man, Mr. Reuss adds a broad-gauged personality that allows for a consideration of the common good in everything he undertakes. He says: 'I am much interested in the St. Elmo-Belle Helene railroad project, primarily because it will open up a cane-growing territory, which so far I have been unable to serve successfully; at the same time I shall not endeavor in any manner to unduly influence the farmers in this neighborhood to the planting of sugar cane solely. I shall be glad to see them devote themselves to the crops that pay them best, whether cane for the Belle Helene refinery, tomatoes for the St. Elmo cannery factory, cotton for the Darrow gin, or corn for the cattle and hogs that every up-to-date farmer should have on his own place.'

Popular Primaries for Postmasters.

The following despatch from Washington, D. C., is of special interest at this time:

"Popular primaries to determine the choice of collectors of internal revenue, postmasters, marshals and surveyors is the latest plan of the Democratic party. Congressmen of that party who have arrived for the session of congress which begins in December are planning to adjust for the Democrats of the respective communities in their districts the question of whom to endorse for the federal positions. These Democratic congressmen already have been besieged with applications, numbering at least twenty for each place, and they believe that by the primary system they can save themselves from political obliteration at the hands of disappointed office-seekers.

"Two of the most conspicuous partisans of the new plan are Representatives Humphreys, of Mississippi, and Beall, of Texas.

"Of course, such a primary would not be binding legally, but the congressmen say they would be guided in its choice for the important postmaster positions, and they believe the president and the postmaster general would abide by the will of the Democratic citizens as expressed in the primary."

State Training School Burned.

The State Training School at Monroe, an institution for the care and education of recalcitrant white youths, was destroyed by fire last Monday afternoon, together with part of its contents. The structure was built of brick, having two and a half stories and basement and cost the state $33,000. Only $10,000 insurance was carried. There were fourteen boys being cared for at the institution, and they will be housed in the superintendent's home until other quarters can be provided. The origin of the fire is unknown, and there was some suspicion that it might have been incendiary, but Superintendent D. C. Barr expresses confidence that none of his charges is responsible for the blaze.
