

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Home and Jute.

[Monroe Democrat.]

Both plants are especially adapted to the country, as has been clearly demonstrated by the success of Mr. W. W. Ataway, in cultivating...

Jute is raised from the seed and requires about 15 lbs. of seed to the acre, it is planted like broom corn and is cultivated much the same way.

Home is a much finer fibre than jute in fact its silky fibres make it useful in manufacture of Lace, Plushes and Velvets.

A machine has just been invented that effectually separates the wood and pulp matter from the fibre, and we predict that within a few years it will be one of the leading crops of the South.

Household Manners.

By household manners we do not mean company manners. Indeed we think that a set of manners kept only for company is apt to grow stiff and rusty for want of constant use.

There was a baby born in a little suburban neighborhood to the north of the city lately, and considerable curiosity was manifested in the new comer by a small group of boys, ranging in years from 8 to 12, who constituted the entire boy population of the neighborhood.

"What are you thinking of, dear?" "Oh, I was just making poetry," she answered with a sigh.

"But what was it? Can't you tell mamma?" After considerable urging she repeated with great feeling:

"It's a sad, sad thing to stand and beg, While the winter winds do blow, For the cold creeps up the little one's leg And makes her shiver so!

"Good enough. When he grows up he can belong to our base-ball club, and by 'n by there'll be another baby around here somewhere, and pretty soon we'll have a nine!"

At a certain country church it was decided by the members to assemble together at a given time to pray for rain, which was badly needed for the growing crops.

The appended letter was sent to a lawyer in reply to the latter's advertisement for a boy to work in his office. The letter is exceedingly illiterate, but it is running over with intelligence.

Some time ago an old British soldier from the East Indies brought us some pills made of spiders' webs, which he told us are largely employed in India as a prophylactic against and cure for ague.

A portion of the tomato vines if protected by sheets, from the first frosts, will continue to yield for some time.

OUR LITTLE FOLKS.

Queer Fancies of Those Who are Just Lifting Life's Curtains.

[Minneapolis Tribune.]

His papa was a clergyman who strictly enforced the rule that the young scion should attend Sunday service despite his tender years.

A Natural Conclusion.

[Wellsboro (Pa.) Agitator.]

A little "fresh-air child" at Elkland, who had never seen a cow before, was watching the milking process with eyes full of astonishment.

Annie Takes an Intermission.

[Babyhood.]

Little Annie, four years of age, threatened me with a "protracted crying spell." Several times she seemed inclined to stop in response to my remonstrances, only to resume "business" with new vigor.

Fair Warning to Grandma.

[Boston Transcript.]

Little Freddy was talking to his grandma, who was something of a sceptic. "Grandma, do you belong to the Presbyterian Church?" "No."

Assorted Clerical Duties.

[Elmira Gazette.]

"Does the preacher pray when he comes to your house?" asked a little five-year-old First Ward girl of a companion.

"Why doesn't he?" He always does when he comes to our house," continued the first, and tells mamma it's been a season of rest to him.

A Fair Poetic Start.

[Minneapolis Tribune.]

Neil was a serious child, with a penchant for poetry. She had stood for a long time looking out at the snow-storm, when her mother said:

"What are you thinking of, dear?" "Oh, I was just making poetry," she answered with a sigh.

After considerable urging she repeated with great feeling:

A Few Little Ones.

When three years old, Willie used to prefer playing with a lead-pencil to any other toy. When the end would become blunt, he would come to his father and say:

There was a baby born in a little suburban neighborhood to the north of the city lately, and considerable curiosity was manifested in the new comer by a small group of boys, ranging in years from 8 to 12, who constituted the entire boy population of the neighborhood.

"Is it a boy?" one of the eight-year-olds asked.

"Good enough. When he grows up he can belong to our base-ball club, and by 'n by there'll be another baby around here somewhere, and pretty soon we'll have a nine!"

At a certain country church it was decided by the members to assemble together at a given time to pray for rain, which was badly needed for the growing crops.

"So's I wouldn't get wet going home," was the confident reply.

The appended letter was sent to a lawyer in reply to the latter's advertisement for a boy to work in his office. The letter is exceedingly illiterate, but it is running over with intelligence.

Some time ago an old British soldier from the East Indies brought us some pills made of spiders' webs, which he told us are largely employed in India as a prophylactic against and cure for ague.
