Why Chas. W. Elliot, of Harvard, a Republican, is Supporting Wilson

In a letter to the New York Times, dated Astoria, Me., Sept. 20, Dr. Charles W. Elliot, the venerable President Emeritus of Harvard University, says:

"The tariff issue in the present campaign is clearly defined. President Taft holds firmly to the theory and practice of protection, and that portion of the Republican party which gives him some measure of support is protectionist on practice. The citizen who believes, as I do, that the existing tariff prevents the expansion of American commerce and trade, protects manufacturing industries from foreign competition which would be wholesale for them, supports artificial monopolies raises the price of many necessities of life and keeps the country as a whole exporting the richness of its soil rather than the products of its killed labor can hardly vote for President Taft, however much he may wish to do so because of respect for his character, resentment at the injustice with which he has been treated and liking for his conservatism.

"The Democratic party, judged by its recent action, seems likely under its new leaders to accomplish a judicious and effective reduction in tariff rates, and indeed is pledged to do so, so far as its platform and the words of its candidates can pledge it.

"The Progressive party, on the other hand, cannot be trusted to deal wisely with the tariff, because its membership is mainly drawn from the former Republican party, which is responsible for the existing tariff and for failure to reduce it, and because its platform is about as protectionist as the Republican. Moreover, its candidate, ex-President Roosevelt, has never shown any acquaintance with tariff questions, and interest in them or any comprehension of the disastrous effects of the tariff on American industries and on the prices of the necessities of life to consumers. His present utterances on the subject are contradictory and vague, and yet likely to mislead the farmers, mechanics and operatives from whom he asks votes.

"The platforms of all three parties are much alike in promising a large number of social and industrial reforms, many of them long known to be desirable, but some full of difficulties and dangers. The Progressive party contains numerous social workers, ministers, young political reformers and other disinterested persons of unquestionable patriotism who think they can further their various philanthropic purposes by utilizing the energy and popularity of Theodore Roosevelt. It also contains men and women who warmly admire Mr. Roosevelt's private character and public career and accept his proffered leadership with enthusiastic devotion.

"Is over these social and industrial reforms that on differences of opinion have arisen concerning the right way of dealing with the obstacles which Constitutions, courts and laws have placed in the pathway of militant reformers; hence the grave constitutional and legal issues in the present election.

"Since all social changes have industrial and political consequences, social reforms like industrial can be safely effected only by the method of cautious experiment with adequate notice and not by the sudden impetuous rush of an emotional multitude. The education of a new generation is often needed to give such reforms satisfactory effect.

"The Democratic party's platform and candidates while less conservative than the Republican hold out more hope or expectation of a wise dealing with the reforms proposed than the Progressive party's do. In particular the published sayings of Gov. Wilson are much more prudent and measured in regard to the proposed changes than those of ex-President Roosevelt. Indeed, Gov. Wilson's temperament, knowledge and experience fit him to deal wisely as President of the United States with all these philanthropic projects.

"The coming troublesome years will call for fairness sober judgment and quiet resolution in the executive head of the Government. Gov. Wilson's career gives many indications that he possesses the qualities. Through thirty years of public life ex-President Roosevelt has proved to the American people that these are not his characteristics.

"For the greater part of the social and industrial improvements which the three national parties seem to contemplate—though not in equal number—can be effected by the Central Government only by a dangerous stretching or evading of constitutional provisions, since they lie within the jurisdiction of the several States. "The National Executive, therefore, at this particular juncture ought not to be an impulsive, self-confident, headstrong man, impatient of restraints and opposition and given to the use of extravagant language. Such a man is ex-President Roosevelt, as both his friends and his foes well know. He also exhibits from time to time a fondness for taking risks and a willingness to use force, which would not be bad signs in an energetic youth but are alarming in a mature statesman.

"The candidate of the Progressive party has shown himself capable, while in power, of taking grave public action—of which course seemed to him wise and right—in disregard of constitutional and legal limitations, and while out of power, of proposing rash changes in the relations of the judiciary to the other departments of the Government and to the voters.

"Finally at the forthcoming election the people are called upon to express, not directly but by implication, their opinion on another constitutional change—the question of a third term in the Presidency. It is ex-President Roosevelt, and the Progressive party that have sprung this important question upon the voters. Fortunately, the issue is clearly joined between the Democratic party, which declares for a single term, and the Progressive party, which has nominated a man who has already held the Presidential office for seven years and a half.

"In all probability to give any one a third term in the Presidency, either with or without an interval between terms, would be an undesirable precedent. All observant citizens know that in the cases of Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, preparations for securing a second term impaired the efficiency and dignity of the President in the last year of his first term. Every Presidential campaign ought to furnish the whole country with a valuable lesson in good manners, fair discussion, sound reasoning and loyalty to ideals. It would be more likely to do so if the President in power could have no ambitions to be gratified and no personal claims on his party or his country.

"In order, however, to arrive at the conclusion that it is not best to give ex-President Roosevelt a third term it is not necessary to discuss broadly the question of the best limit for Presidential service. Is it enough to say that ex-President Roosevelt is a personage peculiarly unfit to be placed for a third time in the Presidential office, because he loves power, ardently desires to exercise the President's power again, and has procured his own nomination by direct personal effort at the cost of splitting the party to which he owed his previous opportunities of a high political career. To these facts frank sayings of Mr. Roosevelt himself abundantly testify.

"Moreover, ex-President Roosevelt has lately contributed by untimely criticisms, couched in intemperate language, to the defeat of the invaluable arbitration treaties of the United States with Great Britain and France, drawn by the Taft Administration, which would have made war between these countries well-nigh impossible. Holding the opinions he has often expressed about the beneficial effects of war on the individual and on society, he can manifestly be only a half-hearted believer in the judicial settlement of international disputes, and would probably prove a dangerous President should questions of war arise. Yet international arbitration, justice and peace have long been and are emphatically today noble policies of the United States.

"Second and third terms may or may not be expedient on general principles, but this particular proposal for a third term is unquestionably expedient.

"These considerations have brought me to the conclusion that it is best to vote for Wilson and Marshall at the forthcoming election."

Almost A Miracle

One of the most startling changes ever seen in any man, according to W. B. Holselaw, Clarendon, Texas, was effected years ago in his brother. "He had such a dreadful cough," he writes, "that all our family thought he was going into consumption, but he began to use Dr. King's New Discovery and was completely cured by ten bottles. Now he is sound and well and weighs 218 pounds. For many years our family has used this wonderful remedy for coughs and colds with excellent results." It's quick, safe, reliable and guaranteed. The Tazewell Republican Shows The Political "Green Eye"

One of the most discourteous editorial acts of a newspaper claiming respectable recognition, was perpetrated by the Tazewell Republican, in its issue of last week.

Governor William Hodges Mann was invited by the Tazewell Fair association to deliver an address, on agriculture on Wednesday of last week, that being the second day of the fair. He accepted and delivered the address on that day. Now on Thursday the next day Tazewell Republican issued. In its editorial columns it contained vile and outrageous attack on both the private and public record of Governor Mann. Accusing the governor of faking his record as a Confederate soldier and of other high crimes and misdemeanors of a political character.

Now let us consider this from the standpoint of courteous treatment alone to an honored guest. Governor Mann as, stated above, an invited guest of Tazewell county at the fair. He did not go to Tazewell on a political mission and political utterance escaped his lips. What provocation induced the Tazewell Republican to let loose its batteries of abuse on a Tazewell guest, we are not informed. We can truthfully say, that the attack was conceived in bad taste and lacked evidence to substantiate it in any detail. Is the Tazewell Republican so politically sensitive, that even the presence of a prominent democrat in Tazewell county, cause it to belch forth in ignorance, prejudice and abuse? A bad condition indeed is this for a newspaper to fall into.

The people of Tazewell county regardless of politics, we know disapprove of and rebuke insults of this nature to their intelligence and hospitality. It is a great pity that such a fine county and splendid citizenship should have a newspaper guilty of such low, mean and despicable acts as the one in question. The Tazewell Republican should apologize and promise reform.—Washington County Journal.

Will Col. Tom Muncy tell the people of Norton what Colonel Roosevelt was driving at when he said, "Any man who supports the receiver of stolen goods stands on a level with the receiver of the stolen goods. He is a dishonest man, and is unfit to associate with honest men."

Will Hon. Ralph C. Coleman or Precher Newt Harman tell the people of Norton what Roosevelt refers to when he says: "I have noticed several Taft badges in your town, and they are the appropriate color of yellow. There never was a yellower performance than that of the Republican managers at the Chicago convention and the badges are just the right color. The man who puts one on, shows that he has a yellow streak somewhere."
