ADDITIONAL RECRUITS TONIGHT.

The Entire Anthracite Coal Fields of Pennsylvania Are Now Idle and a Coal Famine May Be the Result.—The Strikers Are Backed By Organized Labor Everywhere and Are Preparing For a Long Struggle and Victory.

Seranton, Pa., Sept. 15, 11 p. m.—About all the collieries in the anthracite coal regions are idle.

The tie-up became complete tonight, when all miners, who had not gone out earlier in the week, laid down their tools and refused to dig any more coal until their grievances are adjusted.

This last action puts at least 142,000 men idle in the mining districts of the East.

Every influence is being used by the business element to have the difference adjusted and end the strike.

The strikers all express themselves as confident of winning their fight this time for several reasons. First—that they are in the right. Second—that the cry of prosperity by the Republicans will fall flat when the fact is known that thousands have refused to work because the wages paid will not support their families.

John Mitchell, President of the United Mine Workers of America is well pleased with the situation, more so than ever on account of the contributions that are flowing in by the thousands from outside parties who are in full sympathy with the striking miners in their strike for higher wages.

The leaders are urging the necessity of working peaceably and to avoid rioting of any kind.

The mine owners claim there will be no men imported to work in the mines unless the strike is prolonged indefinitely. All the collieries are now shut down and will remain so until all grievances are adjusted.

The management of The Times has decided to issue a special edition, in magazine form, setting forth in elaborate detail the manifold advantages of Greenville and Washington county, from an industrial, commercial and agricultural standpoint.

This issue of The Times will contain more than fifty pages, printed on heavy toned paper and highly illustrated with pictures of our handsome buildings and prominent citizens, together with a vast amount of information concerning the country tributary to Greenville and the men who have done most toward the transformation of dense forests into fertile fields and thriving municipalities.

To make this edition a credit to the city, and section, will require a liberal patronage from the people of Greenville and Washington county, and we believe that they will respond, generously, toward the success of the undertaking.

Not less than 5,000 copies will be issued, and, after thoroughly covering the Greenville district, the remainder of the edition will be mailed to Northern and Eastern manufacturers and homeseekers who are interested in the prosperous and growing South.

Those who are first will be accorded the choicest space in its advertising columns.

For this work, The Times has secured the services of Mr. Edgar G. Harris, a newspaper man of experience and ability, who has done some creditable work in this line.

Those who live outside the city may obtain space in this issue by addressing the office. The rates are reasonable, considering the character of the paper and the large number of copies which will be issued.

REPUBLICAN PARTY TACTICS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 15.—A great many persons know how to run a campaign on paper. The practical management is another thing. A game of chess is child's play when compared to the intricacies of reconciling opposing opinions and bringing harmony out of frequent chaos.

The duties of a campaign manager are of a multifarious character. He must have a thorough understanding of human nature for a fundamental ground work.

The foresight which made Napoleon great, that quality of selecting able aids and responsible men, must form one of the manager's most prominent traits. Personally he cannot attend to the thousand and one details incident to perfecting his plans over the country. His lieutenants must do this for him. Thus in a great measure he proves his judgment. Discretion is the better part of valor. Likewise it should be the predominant feature of campaign management. I believe that ability of high order is required to engineer any party to success.

Again, the whole issue at stake should be viewed by the manager in the light seen by the people of the country at large. It is the consensus of public opinion which makes the party strong. Men vote for sound government irrespective of political affiliations. What the party stands for has often more weight than the party "self."

Different sections of the country have different interests, and the manager must realize all this. What pleases one contingent displeases another. Complaints are often many. They have to be dealt with cautiously and efficiently.

Taken as a whole, the campaign manager is not only expected to be a paragon, but he has to approach that enviable position as nearly as he can.

Others may take credit for a brilliant victory in a national battle between two parties, but if the manager is not awake and on the qui vive for any mismove till the last gun is fired he loses all the prestige which others are so ready to take.
