The Republicans are staking their hopes upon "McKinley prosperity" so-called. They have proclaimed time and again that the prosperity which has come to this country within the past few years is due to the Republican administration of affairs and they will employ that argument to induce the people to continue the Republican regime for four years longer.

After some explanation as to how prices are put up and down by the professional traders who trade not on facts, but on current rumors, which are usually started for that purpose only, and after showing how, through these professional traders, the market is left to drift without the support of the substantial men of the country, it comes to the point and says that it will help all the industries and trade of the country if the solid men of finance during the flighty months of foolishness that are coming make it thoroughly understood from first to last that they have profound confidence in the people and in the financial future.

Untranslated into plain language the Tribune means to say thus to the "solid men of finance," even the rich Republicans of the land: Prosperity must be continued or the Republican party is undone. If you retire from Wall Street and leave the market in the hands of the professional speculators to hammer it down, confidence in the permanent prosperity of this country will be shaken and moreover that extensive class of voters who go with the winning side will come to the conclusion that the Republicans are not confident of McKinley's re-election and they will, therefore, desert what they believe to be a sinking ship and cast their lot with the Democrats.

It is to your interest that the Republican party should win and it will be greatly to your detriment if the Democrats should win. Therefore it will be a good play in politics and a splendid use of campaign money for you to keep the stock market as strong as possible, to make a boom in stocks as indicating continued prosperity and no change in the policy of the Government as mapped out and now maintained by the Republican administration.

The Tribune's article is most adroitly put, but we have given the plain English of it, and it now remains to be seen as to whether or not the "solid men of finance" will rally to the cause. Since the article appeared, stocks have gone down instead of up.

The Baltimore Manufacturers' Record of last week contains an interesting interview with Mr. Abram S. Hewitt on the outlook for iron.

Mr. Hewitt's main contention is that he has entered upon a period of permanently higher prices, and he finds authority for this statement, first, in the rapid and continuous increase in iron consumption, second, in the increasing cost of production in Europe, which hitherto has set the standard for prices throughout the world, and lastly, in the centralization of business interests affording greater facility for restriction of output, and with it the maintenance of the industry on a more stable and a more profitable basis.

The two great centers for dominating the iron and steel of the world are to be the Lake Superior region, with its Bessemer ores, on one side, and Alabama, with its basic ores, on the other. The growth of the basic-steel industry, now that it has been fairly started in the South, ought to be very rapid. That section, with its abundant stores of one and coal and limestone in such close proximity as is found in Alabama, bids fair within the next quarter of a century to dominate the basic-steel industry of the world.

Before the war I foresaw the strength of the South's iron-making possibilities, and in 1877 had a report made on the whole Birmingham district. The war came on and made it impossible to develop these interests, and when the war ended the iron and steel industry had become so strongly fixed in the North that the South labored under great disadvantages. Not only have I always shown my faith in the South by my words, but to the extent of my ability outside of my business interests in the North I have been an investor in Southern iron and coal properties. After the severe test of the long years of depression following 1872, when Alabama's ability to make iron in competition with the possibilities of the South's metallurgical interests. No longer dependent upon the home trade, it has the world for its market, making its tendency to increase by reason of lessening supplies of ore and coal or greater cost in mining, but the South, with its vast supplies of ore and coal, can make iron without great increase in cost.

The people of the United States," says a Washington correspondent, "are paying the $1,000,000 a day for tropical luxuries. All products used in manufacturing, or food and drink, most of which are produced in greater or less degree or can be readily produced in the islands which have come into closer relationship with the United States through the events of the last two years. The April summary of commerce and finance, which has just been issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows that in the ten months ending with April, the imports of tropical products have been over $300,000,000 in value, thus averaging fully $1,000,000 a day, and indicating that for the full year they will reach $350,000,000.

It is not strange that thereafter his hitherto innocent mind should be filled with suspicions and that he should conclude that all men were vile and all women false. It is not strange that he seemed at least to have lost his mental balance. Alas, poor Hamlet!

There is to us no more delightful study in Shakespeare's works than this wonderful creation. We love to read the play over and over again. We love its beautiful word-painting. We delight in its varied scene and dramatic situation. We are fascinated by the mysticism that envelops it. But a newspaper must be practical, and it is for the purpose of making a practical suggestion that we have referred to the play and character of Hamlet. The education of Hamlet was not unlike the education of our young men of this age. The student of a great university lives in a little world of his own, lives a sort of dream life, and while acquiring knowledge is also stuffing his brain with fanciful conceptions of life. He dreams, he sees visions, and it too often happens that when he emerges from college into the every day world and into the practical conditions of life he must be rudely disillusioned before he is ready for his career. We believe that too little care is given to this phase of college life. We have a profound respect for college training and for education in the broadest sense of that term. But this training and this education are for the great purpose of fitting our young men for the practical work of a practical age, not to saturate their brain with poetic illusions.

We do not object to the ideal. Let the students be taught that virtue and honor and patriotism and benevolence and all these, should be the great aim of men, but let them know also that in the career which is before them it is a condition and not a theory that will confront them.

There are two sides to every question and there is something to be said even for the Chinese Boxers who have set out to murder the foreigners. It depends on the point of view. The name of this organization is, being interpreted, the Society of the Great Sword. It originated several years ago in the province of Shantung, which included the greater part of the Southern and Eastern shores of the Gulf of Pe-Chi-Li. The mission of the organization has ever been the harassment of foreigners, particularly Christians. These people have seen foreigners come into their country with the avowed purpose of introducing new customs and of uprooting their religion. They have, no doubt, heard the persistent talk about the "dismemberment of China" and about dividing it among the great powers of the earth. They have, therefore, looked upon every foreigner as an enemy and they have been particularly suspicious of Christian missionaries. It is easy to see why they should regard the foreigners as their enemies, and if one will only put himself in the place of a Boxer, it is easy to see why the Boxer should be opposed to the missionary who is trying to convert the Chinaman from the religion of his fathers and the established religion of his country to a new faith.

But this is no reflection upon the Christian religion. The Exeters have come in contact with a few missionaries here and there, but they have never been in a Christian land to see the great benefits which Christianity confers. They have not been to America to see our churches and hospitals and asylums, to see the thousand and one benevolent societies which have been built up under Christian influences, and hence they do not realize that Christianity and civilization have ever gone hand-in-hand, and that where Christianity has the widest sway there is the greatest civilization.

The Boxers are a lawless set and they must be suppressed. But with the lights before them it is not strange that they should desire to rid their country of the foreign element.

He Was Surrounded in a House at Guadalupe. MANILA, June 9.—General Pio Del Pilar, the most aggressive and most persistent of the Filipino leaders, who was captured last night, was hidden in a house at Guadalupe, six miles east of Manila, by some of the Manila native police. Upon information received that Pio Del Pilar was to be at a certain house, Captain Rios and twelve policemen proceeded in a launch to Guadalupe, where, aided by a detachment of the Twenty-first Infantry, they surrounded the house, captured the General and brought him to Manila this morning, where he was positively identified before the provost marshal.

AMBASSADOR WHITE. He Declined to Talk About the Vice-Presidency. BERLIN, June 9.—The attention of Mr. Andrew D. White, the United States Ambassador, was called to dispatches connecting his name with the Vice-Presidency. Asked for a formal statement on this subject, Mr. White declined to give this, saying he could not discuss the nomination because it had not yet been offered to him. He had some letters from American friends on the subject, but did not think anything would come of it. Nobody has charge of his case in the United States and nobody is pushing it.

Mr. and Mrs. White returned here last night from the island of Foeh, where Mr. White will spend the summer, leaving Berlin about ten days hence.

HENRY GIBBON CANNON. At a meeting of the City Bar, held this morning, the following resolutions were adopted:

Death has again invaded our ranks. The senior member of our profession has been called from among us to his last home, and we, his surviving associates, meet together to render our affectionate tribute to his memory, and to give voice to our sense of our loss.

Henry Gibbon Cannon was a native and life-long resident of this city. His academic education, begun and prosecuted during his boyhood in his best schools, was completed at the University of Virginia, where he graduated in 1858, and came to the bar in 1862, well equipped by the attainments of faithful study and with habits of industry and application, which gave assurance of success.

The soon was in connection with the courts and the jury, and attached to himself valuable clients. The outbreak of the war in 1861 found him in the enjoyment of a remunerative and increasing practice. This, however, he cheerfully abandoned when the peril of his State summoned her sons to the camp, the march and the battlefield. He promptly enlisted in the Confederate army, in the notorious service with that command outside his own State until, in 1863, he was transferred to Virginia. As an officer of the staff of General McCausland, his sphere of duty was chiefly in the western part of the State, and he participated in the memorable Valley campaigns of General Early he was engaged in the most trying and perilous service, having his horse killed under him upon one occasion, and on every field of our winning with the officers and the jury, and attached to himself valuable clients.

After the war he resumed the practice of his profession in Richmond, and continuing his professional work with entire success and distinction until failing health admonished him of the approach of his end.

Recognizing that the law is a jealous mistress, Mr. Cannon devoted himself to his professional life, with a steadfast fidelity which withstood every temptation to court, political fame or position. He never sought office, but office sought him, and he yielded his personal preferences so far as to accept a seat on the Board of Aldermen and chairman of its Finance Committee, in which capacity he rendered most valued and valuable service for several years. With this exception, he passed his long life in his community, simply as a lawyer, and few among the honored and eminent men who have adorned the bar of Richmond enjoyed the confidence and respect of his brethren and fellow-citizens to a greater extent than did he.

Our friend and brother has passed from among us to swell the great majority, who people the farther shores of that bourne whence no traveler returns and whither we are all so rapidly tending; but he leaves behind him a grateful memory, which will long survive this recent sorrow.

To those of his own stricken household, the widow and the orphans, with whom that memory is and will be held in the holy keeping of a daily yearning "for the touch of a banished hand, and the sound of a voice that ever still his surviving associates of the bench and the bar tender their mournful sympathies and assurances of participation with them in their grief and that memory.

Resolved, That a copy of this minute be forwarded to the family of the deceased and published in the city papers.

He never sought office, but office sought him, and he yielded his personal preferences so far as to accept a seat on the Board of Aldermen and chairman of its Finance Committee, in which capacity he rendered most valued and valuable service for several years. With this exception, he passed his long life in his community, simply as a lawyer, and few among the honored and eminent men who have adorned the bar of Richmond enjoyed the confidence and respect of his brethren and fellow-citizens to a greater extent than did he.

Our friend and brother has passed from among us to swell the great majority, who people the farther shores of that bourne whence no traveler returns and whither we are all so rapidly tending; but he leaves behind him a grateful memory, which will long survive this recent sorrow.

To those of his own stricken household, the widow and the orphans, with whom that memory is and will be held in the holy keeping of a daily yearning "for the touch of a banished hand, and the sound of a voice that ever still his surviving associates of the bench and the bar tender their mournful sympathies and assurances of participation with them in their grief and that memory.

Resolved, That a copy of this minute be forwarded to the family of the deceased and published in the city papers.
