STAR BOARDER ARRESTED

Caught Fleeing Along Aberdeen Pike and Taken To County Jail.

A man named J. A. Reynolds was captured on the Aberdeen and Manchester pike one day last week by the marshal of Manchester and taken back to that place, where he was found guilty of endeavoring to beat Landlord J. L. Neal of the Valley House, at Rome, of a board bill in the sum of $42. It was found that Reynolds was a professional board bill jumper and was wanted at McDermott, Garrison and many other up-river points. He gave his home as Columbus, and after a hearing was committed to jail at West Union to await the action of the grand jury.

WE ARE ALL ROOTING FOR BOB.

(Augusta Chronicle.)

Robert L. Green, present clerk of the Court of Appeals of Frankfort, has announced himself as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for state auditor at the approaching August primary, and as far as we have been able to learn, Bracken, his home county, is a unit for him for any office to which he may aspire. He has made one of the best clerks in the history of the state, and is well qualified for the important position to which he now aspires. Should he receive the nomination his name will add much strength to the state ticket at the regular election next November. "Bob" Green has a host of friends throughout Bracken county who will use their influence to make the vote of his home county unanimous for him.

A WOMAN'S APPEAL

To all knowing sufferers of rheumatism, whether muscular or of the joints, sciatica, lumbago, backache, pain in the kidneys or general aches, to write to her for a home treatment which has repeatedly cured all these troubles. She feels it her duty to send it to all sufferers FREE. You cure yourself at home, as thousands will testify—no change of climate being necessary. This simple discovery banishes uric acid from the blood, loosens the stiffened joints, purifies the blood and brightens the eyes, giving elasticity and tone to the whole system. If the above interests you, for proof address Mrs. M. SUMMERS, Box R. South Bend, Ind.

STATE BANK LOANS

May Be Limited By Federal Reserve Board At Next Week's Meeting.

Washington.—Although the Federal Reserve Board will consider the question of how state banks are to be admitted to the Federal Reserve system at a meeting with state bankers here next week, it was said that no general regulation governing the admission of such institutions as have already applied to membership will be made for the present by the board.

The law gives the board authority to make such regulations, but the framing of them has proved a difficult task. The principal point in question has been the loans made by state banks on real estate. Many instances have come to the notice of the board in which state banks have so arranged their real estate loans that their assets have been as liquid as if these loans were on commercial paper. Consequently, it is believed that a general regulation prohibiting loans on real estate beyond a certain point might not only be unattractive to state banks, but might be unnecessary.

Stock Subscription Circulars Have Started Rumor In Ohio City.

Circulars containing the name of Joseph Clarke, who is secretary of the Democratic county committee, are being distributed in Cincinnati, asking for subscriptions to stock and bonds of the Cincinnati Herald, which the circular says will be a one-cent Democratic morning newspaper.

INDEBTEDNESS OF STATE

$3,178,519.

Frankfort.—The state owed $3,178,519.12 in interest bearing warrants at the beginning of business December 1. This amount is an increase in the indebtedness of the state about $200,000 during the last month, as the last report of Auditor Bosworth showed the state to be in debt $2,983,232.64.

TRACHOMA AND ITS RESULTS

Experts Give Valuable Lecture At Lexington On This Scourge of Children.

(Lexington Leader.)

Under the auspices of the Board of Health, interesting illustrated talks on trachoma and its distressing results were given at the Public Library by Dr. John McMullen, the United States government expert, and Dr. J. A. Stucky, who is a pioneer in this field, in the presence of an appreciative audience of physicians, nurses, educators and citizens who are deeply interested in the good work that is being done in Kentucky to stamp out the disease.

Dr. McMullen used many slides taken in the Kentucky mountains illustrating his work there. The showing of the ravages of the disease so near home, and what is being done and had been done to check it was particularly interesting. Dr. McMullen told of the individual cases and of what had been accomplished with them. Some of the patients had come forty miles over the mountains for treatment, he said. He explained that the disease usually yielded to treatment where it was reached soon enough, but that if it was allowed to go unchecked would result in partial or total blindness.

One slide showed a 25-year-old mother of four children, who because of early infection of the disease had never seen any of her children, but upon treatment was able to see her children for the first time and her sight greatly improved, though she had not entirely recovered her sight. Another represented a young man, his wife and child, who were charges on the county, who was unable to bear any light on his eyes, and wore a dark, heavy bandage at all times.

AN ARCTIC MOONSHINER.

It may surprise those who associate "moonshine" whisky only with the southern states' mountains, to learn that since the suppression of the con- tinuous liquor traffic between whites and natives in the north the Eskimo has himself turned "moonshiner." His distilling plant is a small and primitive affair. The still is usually an oil can; the flask stand a powder keg; the worm a twisted gun-barrel; the receptacle to catch the liquor that drips from the worm, a tomato can. He knows nothing of the southern mountaineer's "mash" made from the meat of sprouted corn. His mash is a fermented mixture of flour and molasses. He boils it by placing under the still a pan of blubber oil in which burns a wick of twisted moss. The vapor from the boiling mash passes from the still into the worm, where it is condensed by cold sea water, with which the powder keg is filled by hand, and trickles into the tomato can an alcoholic liquor which tastes like none of the liquors of civilization but equals the finest of them in intoxicating potency. One deep swig of this moonshine of the north will make the usually timid Eskimo brave enough to face his mother-in-law or a polar bear with equally reckless disregard of consequences.

Tea and toast, toast and tea, so liberally consumed by the modern American woman, is given a roast, and the habits of young girls lurching upon salads, pickles, ice cream and cake are likewise scored. No doubt our modern life of rush, hurry and strain causes us to sin largely and frequently against nature's laws. It has been said that the craving for intoxicants and stimulants is largely, and at least in many cases, caused by the failure of the human system to properly assimilate the natural food, and that the stomach, being full of indigestibles, and the nerves not fed, they cry out with an unsatisfied craving, the result being that the intoxicant stills the cry, but does not cure the cause of the cry, just as an opiate hides the pain but does not cure the sore.

BWARE OF THE OVERHEATED ROOM.

Jacksonville, Florida.—Over-heating caused by a badly ventilated room has a more harmful effect upon the human body than the chemical poisons in the air, according to the report of the first years' work of the New York State Commission on Ventilation, read before the American Public Health Association by Prof. C. E. A. Winslow, chairman of the commission. None of these bad effects were noted if the rooms were kept cool, even if the air were not changed at all, but kept stagnant for eight hours. Just one thing the commission found was affected by the chemical substances in stale breathed air—the appetite. The subjects were served with high standard lunches, and what they left on their plates was weighed and analyzed, and it was found that they ate more when the air was fresh than when it was not changed.

OUR BAD EATING.

If the statement made by a Johns Hopkins professor is true, there is a vast difference between the people of the United States and those of Belgium and other nations where the armies have marched and fought. Dr. Lewellyn E. Barker of the Johns Hopkins university, last week made an address before the Tri-State Medical Association in the Monumental City, at which time expressed the opinion that the American nation is fast eating its self into ruin, both physical and commercial, and that unless a halt is called on the speed at which the nation is running, the people of the United States will become the greatest nation of dyspeptics on the face of the earth.

He does not agree with those who attribute to poverty the greater part of mal-nutrition. He attributes it to hasty eating, and points out that the most common cause of ill-nourished bodies is nervous indigestion—a physical lack of properly digested food. The fact of the matter is that all the physicians tell us the same thing. Most of us are ready to admit the charge of too hasty eating and to confess that we recognize its baneful consequences—and then go on gulping down, hoping we can postpone the day of reckoning which comes always, in variably and inflexibly, when one of the commands of that despot, nature, is disobeyed.

We blame the high cost of living when we might consider it a blessing in that it would put out of our reach too abundant supplies of food stuffs, a great deal of the kind that is not specially nourishing. Scarcity of food might induce us to eat not only less but eat less better—in other words, perform as nature intended us to perform, the complete process of mastication.

Tea and toast, toast and tea, so liberally consumed by the modern American woman, is given a roast, and the habits of young girls lurching upon salads, pickles, ice cream and cake are likewise scored. No doubt our modern life of rush, hurry and strain causes us to sin largely and frequently against nature's laws. It has been said that the craving for intoxicants and stimulants is largely, and at least in many cases, caused by the failure of the human system to properly assimilate the natural food, and that the stomach, being full of indigestibles, and the nerves not fed, they cry out with an unsatisfied craving, the result being that the intoxicant stills the cry, but does not cure the cause of the cry, just as an opiate hides the pain but does not cure the sore.

HOW A MAN FEELS WHEN HE TALKS TO A WOMAN.

In the December American Magazine David Grayson, author of "Adventures in Contentment," begins a new novel entitled "Hempfield," in the course of which he comments as follows as to how a man feels when he meets and talks to a woman:

"Whenever I have met a woman I have had a curious sense of being with someone a little higher or better than I am, to whom I should bow or to whom I should present something, or with whom I should joke. With whom I should not, after all, be quite natural! I wonder if this it at all ordinary experience with men—I wonder if anyone will understand me when I say that there has always seemed to me something not quite proper in talking to a woman directly, seriously, without reservation, as to a man."

The average woman gets along with two, but Mrs. Tug Watts carries four handkerchiefs when she goes to a funeral.

Hereditarily has more to do with a man's politics than environment.

THE GOOD-NIGHT STORY.

The Princess' Pomegranates. By VERNON MERRY.

In the far country of Pangoland dwelt the most beautiful princess in the world. The king loved his daughter very dearly, for at her birth the queen had died. He built a wonderful palace for the princess and back of it had a beautiful garden planted.

The princess was very fond of fruit and seldom ate anything else, so in her garden grew every tree with the exception of the pomegranate.

One day when the princess was 15 years old she sat beneath her bower eating a pear, when there suddenly appeared a hideous old hag, bearing a small basket filled with lovely pomegranates.

The princess had never seen such pretty fruit, so she exclaimed: "My good woman, what beautiful fruit you have! It is for sale?"

"Gold can not buy my pomegranates, beautiful princess," answered the old hag, "but to see your pearly teeth bite into my fruit is all that I could desire. Take one and eat it. You have never before tasted such a delicious flavor."

The princess thanked the old hag and began to eat the pomegranate. No sooner had she swallowed the first bite than her nose suddenly grew to five inches long. With a shrill laugh, the old hag, who was a witch, disappeared, leaving the unfortunate princess to bewail her fate.

The poor princess locked herself up in a tower and would see no one. But she was looking out of the window one morning and a bird flew on the sill. About its throat was tied a small packet, which the princess removed. Opening it she found a tiny red apple and on the paper was written: "Eat half the apple and feel the remaining half to the bird." When the princess had eaten the last bit of her half she felt her nose suddenly grow smaller.

Then she fed the other half to the bird, which was immediately transformed into a handsome young prince, who begged her to marry him.

The princess consented and together they sought the king, who was overjoyed to see that his daughter was again the most beautiful princess in the world. He gave orders that the wedding ceremony be performed at once, and for many, many years, they all lived happily together in Pangoland.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

NEWSPAPER ETHICS.

Every one in a while some one brings in printing with a request that it be kept a secret. Perhaps a little information concerning the rules of newspaper offices and printing plants will not be out of place. One of the first things an apprentice is taught is absolute secrecy concerning anything that is done in the office. He must not give out information as to what kind of printing is being done nor give any notice of what is to appear in the paper. Another rule is that the copy book is sacred—that is, outsiders must not read its contents, neither should he read the copy on the case before the compositor. This last is considered by the average printer as ill-bred as the reading of private correspondence. All proof sheets, and, in fact, the paper itself, is considered private office property until it is delivered to the public.

A CONFESSION

Hopes Her Statement, Made Public, will Help Other Women.

Hines, Ala.—"I must confess," says Mrs. Eula Mae Reid, of this place, "that Cardui, the woman's tonic, has done me a great deal of good."

Before I commenced using Cardui, I would spit up everything I ate. I had a tired, sleepy feeling all the time, and was irregular. I could hardly drag around, and would have severe headaches continuously.

Since taking Cardui, I have entirely quit spitting up what I eat. Everything seems to digest all right, and I have gained 10 pounds in weight.

If you are a victim of any of the numerous ills so common to your sex, it is wrong to suffer.

For half a century, Cardui has been relieving just such ills, as is proven by the thousands of letters, similar to the above, which pour into our office, year by year. Cardui is successful because it is composed of ingredients which act on the womanly constitution to build the weaker and strengthen.

Cardui has you, too, won't it?

Modesty can be overcome.
