WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Crowd of 3,000 Persons Applaud as Former Secretary of State Assails Whiskey Traffic and Urges Kentucky to Adopt Prohibition.

URGED SUPPORT OF RED CROSS, Y. M. C. A. AND LIBERTY LOAN ISSUES.

Fully 2,000 persons attending the open air meeting which was held in front of the Court House last night under the auspices of the Democratic Forward League of the State. Mr. Bryan was recently secured by the league to make a number of addresses throughout the state in behalf of the prohibition movement. He has arranged his Chautauque dates in such a manner that he speaks from that platform in the afternoons and in behalf of the Forward League at night. The evening was warm and pleasant and the audience, of which a large percentage was women, stood patiently throughout the entire lecture of the distinguished visitor. Seats for about 100 of the leaders of the prohibition cause in Mason county were reserved about the stage from which the former Secretary of State spoke. Decorations of flags were placed about the rostrum.

Oration For Bryan

Mr. Bryan arrived in Maysville at 5:38 p. m. on C. & O. train No. 16, instead of coming by auto as was planned. Dr. A. J. A. Alexander of Woodford county, who was accompanying the noted man, furnishing the automobile was called home on account of his wife's illness. However a large delegation of about 200 persons welcomed the speaker at the train and escorted him through the streets to the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Burwell on East Second street, where he was entertained during his stay in Maysville.

The Maysville Bluegrass Concert Band discoursed sweet music throughout the evening before the speaking began. This organization deserves commendation for the splendid efforts they made to furnish patriotic anthems to please the auditory nerves of the many hundreds awaiting the speaker.

Introduced by Mr. Wood
Mr. Bryan was introduced by Mr. A. F. Wood of Washington, deputy County Clerk, who referred to him as one of the leading Democrats of the United States. His remarks were very brief, but were to the point.

Mr. Bryan opened his speech by referring to his previous visit to Maysville. He then entered into a discussion of the work of the Red Cross and of the Y. M. C. A. in their wonderful work among the soldiers. He urged the undivided support of all citizens of the country of these two splendid organizations, saying that they were capable of caring for the physical and moral well-being of the soldiers of the army and navy.

Mr. Bryan also urged the purchase of government bonds on all loans authorized. He characterized them as being a most profitable investment and said that they were the safest in the world.

Mr. Bryan said in part:
"The President now bears a heavy burden. No President before him has had a weightier burden than he. The Congressmen have their constituents to represent. The President and Congress have called a million men to be trained and taken to the battle front. They will be called upon to make the most extreme sacrifice known. We have not the burden of the response and we ought to be glad to do what we can.

"There are two things we can do: The first is, we should stand as one man, without a dissenting voice, without discord, and support the Government's every act until this war is over. It matters not what our opinions might have been as to entering the war. The time for discussion is over. When the Government acts it acts for all and in behalf of all. This is the meaning of a democracy.

"There are four ways of effectively increasing production. They are by the organization and co-operation of farmers, by enlisting new producers—child groups are the most important of these, there ought to be ten million children enlisted in corn clubs, canning clubs and garden clubs—economy in the use of foodstuffs. The United States now produces and consumes more food than any other nation in the world does, or ever has in any era in history.

Tells of Crime
"There is no American who can look back over his public career and rejoice over it more than I can. None has seen more things he has advocated written into law.

"But never have I championed a cause so great to its effect to the welfare of the nation, never have I known a ruben glow so readily on the face of a man."

than I am of the fight to make the nation saloonless forever more.

"There is a difference between the advocate of prohibition and his opponent. The advocate of this movement is engaged in an unselfish work. He is working entirely for the people and his country. The opponents are different. There are two classes of them—the influential ones, at least—those who are in the fight for pecuniary reasons and those who are fond of liquor and don't want it abolished.

"The stand of the first call is understood. The second are already demoralized and nearly destroyed. They are those who when sober admit that alcohol is not valuable, and when they are not sober their actions speak louder against it than their words possibly could.

Could Repeal Laws
"The man who says that it is not this, could silence every speaker if he proved alcohol was not injurious. He could tear down the foundation of the fight against it. He could repeal every law written for prohibition on every statute book in every land. But he will not. He will not even attempt to do it. History and experience prove the contrary.

"The line between moderation in drinking and intemperance is too dim to be seen. It is a line like the far horizon where light is lost as it sinks into the black darkness of drunkenness.

Patriotism is Intangible
"Patriotism is intangible, it is eternal, everlasting. For countless ages it has sacrificed and won on the altars of the nation. But patriotism is no match for alcohol. Bombs dropped from the heaven are not so treacherous. Torpedoes rising from the ocean's depths are not as menacing as the schooner that crosses the bar.

"It is only advocated by the host who drink more of profits than the nation's welfare.

"You can trace the saloons by the rising death rates of children. Men who are in the business know they are taking money that could buy food, clothing, shelter and education. They take a man's money and make a man worse.

"What will these saloon men say before the judgment bar of God, who says, 'Thou Shalt Not Kill?' From old age to infancy the toll of their murder for money can be counted. The liquor dealers can corrupt the legislatures but they are powerless before the throne of the Almighty."

"We now come to a new issue. Kentucky must decide whether to join. If she does not decide in favor of prohibition she decides in favor of an issue which the majority of the people of the nation have decided against. She gets on the immoral side of a moral issue.

"I would not exchange one bright boy for all the war bonds whiskey and money could buy.

"No man is more indebted to the Democratic party than I am. When I was thirty years old and the party took me up and I have been in it ever since. All I have, all I am, all I ever hope to be, I owe to the Democratic party. I would not be worthy of any part of this if I would not risk anything to keep that party from becoming sordid regarded nefarious. The liquor interests have tried to control everywhere else in the elections. They will try to do it in Kentucky. But, so help me God, they won't if anything I can do can keep them from it.

"Do not bury the party in a drunkard's grave and place above its tomb the stigma of dying in delirium tremens and disgrace."

Many persons are planning to go to Ruggles Camp Grounds on next Wednesday, July 4th, to attend the Old Settlers' Reunion. This popular, camping grounds annually draws hundreds of people from all over northern Kentucky.
