From the Maumee River Times.
A Tribute,
 To the memory of our departed "loved one," ASENATH PATRICK.
 Our once bright health is to-day now—our loveliest one is gone.
 She faded like the sweet Spring flowers, when autumn storms come on.
 Like the dew drops of the morning, or the visions of the heart.
 She lingered but a "little while," ere we were called to part.
 We miss her!—yes!—we miss the step—we miss the joyous tone.
 Which rang like music through these halls, in answer to our own.
 We miss the pressure of that hand, the glance of that mild eye.
 Which beamed on us so smilingly—which told of pleasures high.
 She was a father's—mother's pride—the happiest of our kind.
 And can it be, that she has gone to try the "spirit land?"
 Oh! can it be, the tyrant dread, who rules the silent tomb.
 Has snatched the lightness of that heart, and robbed that cheek of bloom?
 Yes! how sadly good we on her! when the hour to part drew nigh.
 When the death dew stood upon her brow, the death film o'er her eye.
 We gazed upon her, all, save one—a loved one far away.
 Who knew not that in death's embrace, her dearest sister lay.
 The bird of death hath swept our hearth, with his restless wing.
 He stole our best—our brightest one—we can no longer sleep.
 We cannot strike a tuneful lay, our hearts are filled with gloom.
 For she who used to sing for us, lies in the silent tomb.
 Her voice no longer greets us with the songs we need so well.
 The roses so sweet, have died away, on which we used to dwell.
 But though we hear them not on earth—from down ill dewy eve,
 We think we hear, from hour to hour, that melody in heaven.
 She slumbers now in quietude, how peaceful is her rest.
 With wild flowers, waving o'er her, the green turf on her breast.
 'Gay birds, with music soft and sweet, sing o'er her grave tomb.
 And to us, a "lonely band, will oft at evening come.
 There will our tears of sorrow fall—there will we broken-hearted, Four forth the sighs of grief for her, who thus early hath departed.
 And in the "coronach of the heart" her name shall be enshrined.
 Her memory shall ever be with—"Hope, Faith, Love entwined."
 We miss her tones—'tis mourn her loss—but too pure for mortal time.
 She sweeps the "golden harp" of love in yon celestial clime.
 And may we meet "in that sweet home" and there forever dwell.
 Where mourning hearts, wrung by death's darts, shall never say "farewell."
 She rests in slumber—peacefully, she yielded up her breath.
 Nor gave one last faint struggle when life was lost in death.
 Beyond the reach of sorrows wild, her hopes can never fail.
 Nor o'er her can the lowering clouds of dark temptation fall.
 Dedance, O., Oct. 15, 1851. MILLA.

QUAKER'S REVENGE.
 Obadiah Lawson and Watt Dood were neighbors; that is, they lived within half a mile of each other, and no person lived between their respective farms, which would have joined, had not a little strip of prairie land extended itself sufficiently to keep them separated. Dood was the oldest settler, and from his youth up had entertained a singular hatred against Quakers; therefore, when he was informed that Lawson, a regular disciple of that class of people, had purchased the next farm to his, he declared he would make him glad to move away again.
 Accordingly a system of petty annoyances was commenced by him; and every time one of Lawson's hogs chanced to stray upon Dood's place, he was beset by men and dogs, and most savagely abused.
 Things progressed thus for nearly a year, and the Quaker, a man of decidedly peace principles, appeared in no way to resent the injuries received at the hands of his spiteful neighbor. But matters were drawing to a crisis: for Dood, more enraged than ever at the quiet of Obadiah, made oath that he would do something before long to wake up the spank of Lawson. Chance favored his design. The Quaker had a high-blooded filly, which he had been very careful in raising and which was just four years old. Lawson took great pride in this animal, and had refused a large sum of money for her.
 One evening, a little after sundown, as Watt Dood was passing around his corn field, he discovered the filly in the little strip of prairie land that separated the two farms, and he conceived the hellish design of throwing off two or three rails of his fence, that the horse might get into his corn during the night.
 He did so, and the next morning, bright and early, he shouldered his rifle and left the house. Not long after his absence, a hired man, whom he had recently employed, heard the echo of his gun, and in a few minutes Dood, considerably excited and out of breath, came hurrying to the house, where he stated that he had shot at and wounded a buck; that the deer had attacked him, and he had escaped with his life.
 This story was credited by all but the newly employed hand, who had taken a dislike to Watt, and from his manner judged that something was wrong. He therefore slipped quietly away from the house, and going through the field in the direction of the shot, he suddenly came upon Lawson's filly, stretched upon the earth, with a bullet hole through the head, from which the warm blood was still oozing.
 The animal was warm, and could not have been killed an hour. He hastened back to the dwelling of Dood, who met him in the yard, and demanded, somewhat roughly, where he had been.

 'I've been to see if your bullet made sure work of Mr. Lawson's filly,' was the instant retort.
 Watt paled for a moment, but collecting himself, he fiercely shouted, 'do you dare to say I killed her?'
 'How do you know she is dead?' said the man.
 Dood bit his lip, hesitated a moment, and then turning, walked into the house.
 A couple of days passed by, and the morning of the third one had broken, as the hired man met friend Lawson, riding in search of his filly.
 A few words of explanation ensued, when with a heavy heart the Quaker turned his horse and rode home, where he informed the people of the fate of his filly. No threat of recrimination escaped him; he did not even go to recover damages, but calmly awaited his plan and hour of revenge. It came at last.
 Watt Dood had a Durham heifer, for which he had paid a heavy price, and upon which he counted to make great gains.
 One morning, just as Obadiah was sitting down, his eldest son came in with the information that neighbor Dood's heifer had broken down the fence, entered the yard, and after eating most
