STRANGE CONDUCT.

A lady richly dressed arrived in the Columbus Union depot on the Ohio Central last Saturday evening whose actions seemed to a Journal reporter of that city, to be very strange.

She had not spoken a word on the train on which she arrived, although the train crew tried to engage her in conversation. Was there anything strange about that? Next, when she alighted in the Union Depot, she immediately proceeded to the ticket office purchased a ticket to Chicago, asked Mr. Evans, the agent, when her train left and thanked him kindly for the information.

Was there anything strange about that? She immediately proceeded to the ladies waiting room to await her train. In the hour that she waited several persons, who wished to know other people's business besides their own, the police among them, inquired of her where she wished to go, to which she made no answer. Two minutes before her train left she coolly walked across the track and got aboard her train.

Was there anything strange about that? The reporter says, her actions created a great deal of comment about the depot.

The people must not have much to think about if their special attention is attracted by a woman that merely had nothing to say to inquisitiveness. The reporter on the Journal either thought it very strange that a woman could keep her mouth closed and not tell everything she knew or he had not gotten in his requisite amount of matter for the issue and concluded to write up a little nothing.

GORTON'S MINSTRELS.

The programme offered by the above company when they appear at Rempel's Opera House Saturday Jan. 30 will embrace several decided novelties and a number of equally good specialties.

The stage will be handsomely draped with massive curtains of cream satin and plush and the entire company appear in evening dress.

In the olio will be Welby and Pearl in an entire new acrobatic specialty. DeWitt Cooke in artistic Indian club exercises.

Johnston and Ward in their sensational military novelty "On Guard," in which they do some clever work with rifle and bayonet, the Elliott Bros. and Matt and Lawrence Diamond in their song and dance "Swell Society," "The March of the White Hussars" in elegant costumes of white satin and gold, the latest dancing novelty "The Mazoarka Cloz" and an allegorical statue cloz with six tableaux.

This should form a programme to suit the most exacting.

TERRIBLE FIRE.

Most Disastrous Conflagration in Columbus.

On last Tuesday at 7:30 a. m., fire broke out in the elegant Metropolitan Opera House Building, on corner of Rich and High, Columbus O.

Over seven hundred people were employed in the building, and some very narrow escapes were made. Delay was caused in turning in the alarm by the alarmist running to the engine house instead of turning in from the 3rd street box.

Before an engine was on the scene the whole building seemed wrapped in flames. The streets were slippery and it was almost impossible to get a good stand for an engine to do work.

It was a foregone conclusion that the immense structure was doomed before anything could be done, and all force played upon surrounding structures to save them. The first thought was to save all human life confined in the building.

In the Gazette Printing Co's office were several girls who were shut in on all sides by flames before they were cognizant of their danger. The fore-thought of one saved all the rest. She crashed through a window leading into a hall and all the girls clambered through, and rushing through a cloud of smoke, found safety in the crowded street.

At one time when the massive building seemed a glow of flaming tongues, a half dozen pale faced girls appear at a fourth story window. A horror of more magnitude than the one of recent happening in that city stared the people in the face. Could they stand there and see six helpless beings sink into a flaming furnace of hell and offer no sacrifice in their behalf.

"Go to the fire escape," was yelled from the crowd, but the pale faced girls stood like cold, marble statues, paralyzed with terror. As quick a thought a dozen brave men swinging themselves from the pavement to the store awnings, thence to the fire escape and mounted it with the swiftness of monkeys. Soon they were at the fourth landing, crashed through the windows, gathered up the ladies like babes in their arms and swung themselves safely to the ground, cheered by the thankful and exultant throng. Nor had they more than reached safety when the cruel flames put forth their eager fangs in and around the fire escape. The firemen worked hard but it seemed that control was impossible to obtain. A dispatch called for help from Cincinnati, but the order was recalled an hour later as the flames succumbed to the mighty power brought to bear against them. The handsome block that stood a pride and peer of beauty now lays a mass of ruins in cold and gray. The losses of a dozen firms were very heavy.

Seibert & Lilly, $30,000. Jeffrey, on building, $70,000. Isaac Eberly, $75,000. Geo. Foster, $40,000. Gazette Printing House, $20,000 A. Swener, $6,000. Steinhauser, liquor, $10,000. H. C. Godman, $20,000. J. H. Bares, $20,000. H. & N. Gundrisher, $15,000 H. Holliday, $10,000. Staley, Morton & Co, $18,000. Sloan's Saloon, $1,000. J. M. Baker & Co., $12,000. Dixon & Talbot, $20,000. Columbus Express, $6,000.

Most of the great losses were insured for the half or more. Columbus in all her history, has never seen such a disastrous fire.
