Ben Shoves the Quill in the Interest of the Amuse

I had a dandy time at Detroit and I feel fine since getting back—and by the easy way I was glad to get back for I missed that bunk of mine in the tent.

Had an awful bunch at the show last night you know it was the free kids night. Every little boy and girl in town was there (except two over on Hunter St.) Our pictures are getting better I can tell by the number of Glad Hands I get at the door. This is about the time when the Travelogue slides ought to be sliding in, I am expecting them every second. I had a regular "button buster" of a contest last Friday night, did you see it? The next time you hear me shouting through that "tin horn" of mine just come down and see the contest. I'll have another tonight.

If you have that tired feeling—can't eat—get up with a pain in your back—just go to the Amuse and laugh, it will do you good. (Sounds like "None genuine unless it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher," don't it?)

Now be sure and get in on our free contest TONIGHT.

Walk, write or telephone all your suggestions for contests to BEN.

"CREAM HORN," OF COURSE.

Cedar Grove

Mr. Lon Warthman conceived the idea of breaking one of his oxen to the single line last week.

Mr. Warthman wanted to get the animal used to the line so that he could plow corn. Mr. Warthman laped the line securely around his wrist and bid the ox go, and when the ox went he went in a hurry, dashed into the creek that was near by, which was about 40 feet wide and 20 feet deep. Mr. Warthman being fast to single line went with the ox into the water and sank to the bottom, but when the ox got on the side of the creek Mr. Warthman was near by for the single line had brought him safe through the creek. He now regained his footing. The ox started with great speed in the direction of So. Bloomingville, with Mr. Warthman coming rapidly behind. Sometimes Mr. Warthman was behind the ox, sometimes in front, sometimes to the right, sometimes to the left, and sometimes he did not know where he was. The ox ran about a mile in the direction of So. Bloomingville, when he came up where Asa Ward and Pete Weed were eating honey, which they had obtained by cutting a bee tree. The ox ran up to Mr. Ward, his old master, and stopped. Mr. Warthman was now extricated from the ox. Mr. Ward noticed that there was a large horse fly on the ox's right ear, and had probed to such a depth that his ear was all bloody. The mystery was explained. The blood on the ox's ear was the cause of the revolution. Mr. Warthman said that while the ox was going he was also going, and had a chance to breathe heaven's free atmosphere. Mr. Warthman claims by a little more training that he can have his ox ready to plow corn.
