MY LETTER.

To "The Folks."

BY MRS. SARA WOLVERTON.

I heard to-day a piece of news, I'll tell you, it is this:

They say I'm not myself at all, "The folks in Gallipolis!"

Well, that might-hap; perhaps it is, But yet I think I be;

And if I'm not, that other gal, I'd give a cent to see.

I know at least, my name's my own, I've writ it in our Book;

And if you don't believe my words, Why, just come on, and look.

And he or she who steals that same, Steals what I value much;

And there's a reckoning aftermath, For any one of such.

And too, I don't propose at all To raise my castle down;

I mean to win, and wear, for sure, A—well—you know—o!

And ye who read my simple lines, Perhaps some flowersets view;

Please rest assured that she who writes, Signs only but the true.

And if among her random notes— Her bits of light and shade,— You find there are of any worth, Her work is well repaid.

She gleams along the hillside, Beside the waters clear,

Tho' often in the darkest woods The brightest buds appear.

She gives them out with hearty hand, Her might upon the sea—

And hopes sometime in future land They'll value treasure be.

DEKROT, July, 1875.

THE WISHING RING.

A young farmer, whose farming did not prosper particularly well, was sitting resting on his plow for a moment, as he wiped his brow, when an old witch crept up to him and said:

"Why do you toil so hard for nothing? Walk straight before you for two days, and you will come to a large fir tree, which stands alone, towering above all the other trees in the forest. If you can but fell it, your fortune is made."

The farmer did not wait to be told twice, but taking his ax on his shoulder, started on his way. After walking two days, he came to the fir tree, and immediately set to work to fell it. Soon it toppled and fell to the earth, when from the top branches dropped a nest containing two eggs. The eggs rolled on the ground and broke; as they broke, forth came a young eagle from one, and a small golden ring from the other. The farmer saw the ring, and it reached half the height of a man, shook its wings, as if to try them, raised itself from the ground, and then cried:

"You have released me! As a token of my gratitude, take the ring; the other egg contains it; it is a wishing-ring. Turn it on your finger, speak your wish aloud, and it will immediately be granted. But the ring has only one wish; when that is accomplished, it will lose all power, and become no more than any other ring. Therefore reflect well on what you wish for, so that you may not have cause to repent afterward."

Having so spoken, the eagle rose high into the air, swept for some time in wide circles over the farmer's head, and then, like an arrow, shot swiftly toward the east. The farmer took the ring, put it on his finger, and started homeward. Toward evening he reached the town. At the door of his shop a goldsmith stood who had many valuable rings for sale. The farmer showed him his ring, and asked him what was about the value of it.

"Merely trumpery," answered the goldsmith.

The farmer laughed heartily, telling him of a wishing ring, and of more value than all the rings in his shop put together. Now the goldsmith was a false, designing man, so he invited the farmer to stop all night at his house, saying:

"It must bring me good luck to entertain a man who is the possessor of such a precious jewel, so pray remain with me."

He accordingly entertained him well with plenty of wine and civil words, but when he went to bed at night he drew the ring stealthily from his finger, and put on it instead a common ring quite like it in appearance. He woke him in the early dawn, saying:

"You have so far to go you had better start early."

As soon as the farmer was well on his journey, the goldsmith went into his room, and having shut the shutters that no one might see, he bolted himself in, and standing in the middle of the room, and turning the ring on his finger, exclaimed:

"I wish to have a hundred thousand silver crowns immediately!"

Hardly were the words spoken when bright five shilling pieces began to rain down from the ceiling; shining silver crowns poured down so fast and hard that at last they began to beat him unmercifully about the head and shoulders and arms. Calling piteously for help, he tried to rush to the door, but before he could reach it and unbolt it he fell bleeding to the ground. Still the rain of silver crowns did not cease, and soon used the weight of it, the flooring gave way, and the unfortunate goldsmith and his money fell down into a deep cellar. And still it rained on till the hundred thousand silver crowns were completed, and then the goldsmith lay dead in his cellar, with the mass of money upon him. Attracted at last by the noise, the neighbors rushed to the spot, and on finding the goldsmith dead under his money, exclaimed:

"It really is a great misfortune

when blessings rain down like cuds."

Then the heirs came and divided the spoil. Meantime the farmer went happily home, and showed the ring to his wife.

"We shall never want for anything, dear wife," he said. "Our fortune is made. But we must consider well what we wish for."

The wife had a bright idea ready at hand.

"Let us wish ourselves some more land," said she. "We have so little. There is just such a nice strip which stretches quite into our field; let us wish for that."

"That would never be worth while," replied the husband, "we have only to work we'll for a year, and have a moderate share of good luck, and we can buy it for ourselves."

"You see," said the husband, "the land is ours, and the wish too."
