THE SCORPION.

Characteristics of a Very Dangerous Inhabitant of the Bermudas.

I must confess to having had a very vague idea about the scorpion before becoming acquainted with the tropics.

I must confess to having had a very vague idea about the scorpion before becoming acquainted with the tropics. I think if I had been driven to it I should have described him as a creature with wings, black, and somewhere about the size of a humming-bird. This would have been about as inaccurate a description as can be imagined. He is a large, black, and somewhat hairy creature, with a long, thin tail, and a pair of pincers at the end of his tail. He is a very dangerous creature, and he is found in all the tropics.
