INHERIT THE JOB.

The Postmasters of a Little Town in Kent, England.

Forty years before, as quite a boy, Jones had left a little town in Kent, England. Now, on the first long vacation he ever had since, he was visiting his childhood scenes. He had remembered that the postmaster's name was Pengeley, and he had remembered, too, that he was a kindly old man. There wasn't the slightest probability, he thought, that the postmaster was still alive, but his acquaintance with the former incumbent might smooth things a little with the new one, so that the whereabouts of people to whom he had been directed would be made known.

"What's become of Mr. Pengeley?" he asked, interrupting for a moment his majesty's letter assorter.

"I am Mr. Pengeley."

"Perhaps you're his son."

"Yes; my father's name was Pengeley, too," drawled the Englishman.

"I mean the postmaster."

"So do I."

"Was your father postmaster forty years ago?"

"My word, no! That was my grandfather. You see, our names are all alike, and the postoffice department doesn't know but that the first one is alive. We inherit this job, don't you know. And my wife's just presented me with a son. There was no haggling over his name."—New York Press.

S. M. SPITTLER.

488 Elizabeth Street, Mio, O., July 30, 1899.

Month after month I read the testimonials of people who had been cured of tuberculosis by Nature's Creation, but paid no particular attention as I thought it was largely being sold through the catchy advertising. After a while I noticed that nearly all the testimonials were from reliable people right in Columbus, who could be seen, and not from distant towns, as is the case with all other medical advertising. So I concluded to investigate and found that the medicine was really making miraculous cures by the score. The treatment has done just the same for me as it did for the many whose testimonials I doubted. No one could possibly doubt the merits of the treatment if they knew how it has cured me. I could not possibly feel any better and am now working hard every day.

Yours truly,

S. M. Spittler

Probably you feel as Mr. Spittler did. If so allow us to send you booklet with statements from fifty more Ohio people whom you can call on personally. We send it free of charge. Address: The Nature's Creation Co., Dept. C, Columbus, Ohio.
