It does not make us feel very bad to say ex-President Taft.

With two editors in his cabinet President Wilson's administration should be a success.

"Will Mexico Commit Suicide" is a head line in an exchange. If it don't it will be assassinated.

Tuesday, March 4, was the first day of the open season for Democratic job hunting. It is of indefinite length.

The day will soon be here when the first championship game will be played and there will be something worth reading in the daily papers.

How few unpaid debts there would be, if everyone was as anxious to pay what he owes as he is ready to take offense at the plan adopted to get him to pay.

If people worried as much about whether it was right to do a certain thing as they do about what people will think about it, the world would be much better than it is.

The editor of the esteemed Oxford Herald says that he has not been sick five days in the last twenty years and attributes his good health to never going out at night. We congratulate him on his good health, but feel sorry for him when we think of the fun he has missed.

From a number of things we have seen in the Ohio State Journal we are forced to believe that Monday has its trials for the paragrapher of that valued journal, but if he was not only the editor but the paymaster of a country newspaper, he would realize that Saturday is often dark and dreary.

A Disgraceful Occurrence.

That the women, who marched in the suffrage parade at Washington City on the day before the inauguration of President Wilson, were interfered with by disorderly mobs and were subjected to insulting remarks and hoots and jeers is a disgrace to that city. That such a thing should have occurred at the Nation's Capital is to be deeply regretted. It is impossible for us to understand how people can be so mean, contemptible and cowardly as to make loud and vulgar remarks to women, women of education and culture who are working in behalf of a principle which they believe to be right. But we suppose that every nation is cursed by having creatures in it who have so little intelligence that they think it is smart to do such things; who are without sense of decency. It is a pity but there seem to be as many curs among people as among dogs.

A Notable Address.

Have you read the inaugural address of President Wilson? If you have not you should and if you have read it, it will pay you to reread it, as you will find something in it worthy of thought, which you missed on the first reading.

Even if you do not agree with him in all he says, and as general propositions we do not see how you can help it, you must be impressed by his clean cut, clear manner of expression and feel that it is the utterance of a man of lofty thoughts and noble purposes. It rings true. It is not the speech of a partisan, but of a statesman and a patriot, of a man who is striving for the best interests of all the people and not for the glory of his party.

While he does not attempt to outline the policy of his administration in regard to the vital questions of the day, he clearly shows that he fully realizes what the vital questions are and that the problem of capital and labor overshadows all others.

Consider the following extracts taken from different parts of the address and see how he always places country above party:

"The success of a party means little except when the nation is using that party for a large and definite purpose."

"It is inconceivable that we should do this as partisans."

"We know our task to be no mere task of politics, but a task which will search us through and through, whether we be able to understand our time and the need of our people, whether we be indeed their spokesman and interpreters, whether we have the pure heart to comprehend and the rectified will to choose our high course of action."

His pride in the great progress this nation has made is shown in every line of the address, but that this progress has been often made at the expense of humanity he is also able to see, that we often have been careless of "the health of its men and its women and its children, as well as their rights in the struggle for existence. This is no sentimental duty. The firm basis of government is justice not pity. These are matters of justice."

He promises always justice to both the rich and poor, the strong and the weak, but states, that it is the duty of the government to keep the strong from preying upon the weak.

He closes his address as follows:

"This is not a day of triumph; it is a day of dedication. Here muster, not the forces of party, but the forces of humanity. Men's hearts wait upon us; men's lives hang in the balance; men's hopes call upon us to say what we will do. Who shall live up to the great trust? Who dares fail to try? I summon all honest men, all patriotic, all forward-looking men to my side. God helping me, I will not fail them if they will but counsel and sustain me!"

Who can read this call and not hope that every aim and every purpose so fervently expressed will be fulfilled and promise to render whatever aid they can to President Wilson in the great task he has before him.

Buford was greatly alarmed this morning by a run away team of B. Brown's. Mr. Brown is to be complimented for his great presence of mind, turning his team into the church yard at the risk of his own life, rather than run into several wagons loaded with furniture that were on the bridge.

While the turn was so short, that one horse was thrown over the fence at J. Lewis'. Mr. Brown escaped uninjured. The horses became frightened by a school boy who ran out to the end of the walk, as a number of the country children were getting off the wagon. No serious damage was done.

The 5th of March marked the 81st milestone in the life of one of Buford's well beloved and highly esteemed citizens, A. J. Tolle, who has been a resident of this place for the past 45 years and a voter for the past 60 years. "Uncle Jackson" as he is generally known, is a man of great faith, both spiritually and politically. He said, I am glad to have lived to see the inauguration of another Democratic president, as I have never missed voting the head of the ticket.

Rev. Wilkins, of Dayton, preached Sunday at the Christian church.

The mutton pie was the forerunner of the mince pie as a Christmas tid-bit.
