EDITORIAL CONVENTION.

Excursion Down the Hocking Valley-- New Straitsville Coal Mines and Miners--Athens--Its Features--The Insane Asylum--Feastings, &c.
As the hour of eight approached, on Friday morning, the members of the fraternity assembled in the depot at Columbus, where the train was already made up for the excursion down the Hocking Valley. President Greene and other officers of the road were on hand to see after the comfort of their guests, and at 8 sharp, all being on board, the train steamed out of the depot, and we were off for the coal mines. Passing the town of Grovesport, a short stop was made at Canal Winchester, where some refreshments were taken on board, and soon after, Mack, of the Statesman, became acquainted with the mysteries of Hopley's private glass. Winchester is an old town, but seems to have taken a new growth since the opening of the road. Lancaster was the next stop.
Prominent among the buildings at this place is a large new school house, recently erected and not yet finished, but giving evidence of architectural beauty in its construction. It is located on a hill some distance from but overlooking the depot, and is calculated to give a favorable impression of the intelligence of the community. At Logan, which is the junction of the road to Straitsville, we turned from the main line, and ran down among the hills into the coal region. As we advanced, the fields looked more unpromising, and the hills more barren, until at last it was a rare sight to see a cultivated spot. The mineral wealth of the country is its redeeming quality, but in this it abounds. We reached
NEW STRAITSVILLE
at half past ten, and then deliberated for an exploration of the mines, President Greene announcing that the train would leave at 12 o'clock sharp.
The main mine, at this place, is but a short distance from the track, and the company under the lead of Mr. Martin, Superintendent, climbed the hill side, or wandered up the coal screen stairs, to watch the operation of screening, when the coal was dumped. Assembled at the mouth of the mine, lamps were lighted and distributed and the procession moved into the mine. A pleasant hour was spent in the exploration, and several bushels of specimens, more or less, found their way into various pockets.
At one point on the line of march, the company wandered into a miners' meeting, where they were discussing the propriety of asking an advance in wages.
Of course the miners were interviewed, and some facts learned which in a measure seemed to justify the demand, but the depressed condition of trade, with the price of coal at the mines, it was claimed by the operators, would not justify the advance asked for. The miners did not seem excited, but suspended work for the day. A meeting was to be held in the evening to determine what they should do, and as they have not "struck," it is presumable that the sober second thought prevailed.
At the hour appointed, the train was again in motion for Logan, where we struck the main line and started for Athens. No stop of any consequence was made until we reached the depot at that place, where we arrived at about two o'clock. The courteous managers of the road had arranged to furnish a dinner at this point, and numerous tables were spread with A BOUNTIFUL REPART. which was duly enjoyed by the company, which was by this time prepared to "do justice to the occasion." After a hearty meal, it was announced that carriages were in readiness to convey the guests to the Insane Asylum, and quite a delegation started to inspect it, while others preferred to stroll off on foot to see the town. We were among the latter. A visitor is not favorably impres-sioned with the first view of Athens. He sees it at a disadvantage, but after struggling over the brow of a hill and pushing down the other side, he finds quite a town with some very neat residences, particularly those of more recent occupation. The COURT HOUSE,
however, is a disgrace to any community.
Old, rickety, dull and dismal looking, it is an irritation and an eye-sore to the citizens and continual rebuke to the county. The town has grown so ashamed of it, that, in order to retrieve the reputation of the place, it has recently erected a most creditable TOWN HALL BUILDING.
Large and sightly, it is exhibited with pleasure as a redeeming feature of the place. The hall is capable of seating 600 persons, but is not quite finished, although supplied with a full complement of chairs. We made some pleasant acquaintances, while there, who endeavored to make our short stay agreeable. In company with them we paid a visit to the old
OHIO UNIVERSITY, which occupies an elevated position, but is in rather a woe-begone condition. The building was erected in 1817, and though a substantial structure wears an air of poverty. Its endowment consists of inalienable lands. At first these lands were offered for lease for ninety-nine years, at a given rental based upon the appraised value of the lands, and subject to re-appraisal every thirty-third year. This proved objectionable, as those desiring to lease early discovered that their improvements would only tend, after awhile, to increase their rental; The lands of the University were not settled, but others were taken up, and the University was obliged in order to make their lands available, to place a value upon them and rent them without any provision for re-appraisal during the continuance of the lease. As a consequence, its income only amounts to about $5,000 per year, and the resources arising from the renting of rooms in its dormitories, not sufficient to enable it to take its proper position among the educational institutions of the land. The State should devise some means by which to relieve it from its embarrassment.

After examining the premises, we resumed our walk about the place, until overtaken by a conveyance from the Asylum and with a request to "go over," which we did. Here, in one of the large upper rooms, was spread a collation which would have done a hungry man's eyes good, but to which ample justice was not done owing to the exhaustive feast we had upon arrival at the depot. The ice cream and strawberries were, however, very tempting and were freely eaten. Here the Association was again called to order by Brother Comley, and Mr. John D. Martin of Lancaster called out. He gave an interesting account of the mining operations, the expenses of conducting the business, and the ratio of receipts paid to the workmen. Referred to the grape-growing interest about Lancaster and the manufactures of the Hook-Hocking Wine company, whose products the guests had had ample opportunity to sample during their trip. Said President Greene was a temperance man, and would rather have it understood that the wine furnished was not a portion of the Railroad company's hospitality; but he had always noticed that when the President was going to have any guest along the road he was sure to be apprised of the fact by telegram. After further pleasant remarks Mr. Martin retired from the stand expressing the hope that all had been well pleased with the trip.
Brother McGregor, of the Stark County Democrat was called on, and read an excellent poem prepared for the occasion. The Committee on resolution then reported, returning thanks to everybody and everything which had contributed to the pleasures of the occasion. The invitation to visit Put-in-Bay, next year, as the guests of Colonel Sweeney, and of the C. S. & C. railroad was formally accepted, and the meeting declared adjourned. The vehicles being in readiness, all were soon returned to the depot, which we left about half-past five o'clock, making excellent time on the return trip. A very fine view of the city of Lancaster is obtained in approaching it from the South, and one gets a more favorable impression of it and its surroundings. From Lancaster the run to Columbus, (25 miles) was made in forty-two minutes, and once in the depot, the Convention assumed the character of a dissolving view, and a few minutes only were necessary to disperse its members to all points of the compass. But we venture the assertion that none who were present will ever forget the social pleasures of the occasion or the era of good feeling it produced.
