TRUSTEE'S SALE OF A DESIRABLE FARM, Situate in Carroll County, Maryland.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Carroll county, sitting as a Court of Equity, passed in case No. 3451 on the Equity Docket of said Court, wherein Lewis D. Wantz and others are complainants, and Mary Wantz, widow of John C. Wantz, deceased, and others are defendants, the undersigned, trustees therein appointed to sell the real estate in the proceedings in said cause mentioned, will sell at public sale, to the highest bidder, on the premises, on THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10th, 1896, at 1:30 o'clock, p. m., all that desirable farm or parcel of land containing 87 ACRES, 2 ROADS and 15 PERCHES, more or less, of which said John C. Wantz died seized and possessed. This property is improved by two sets of buildings located conveniently thereon, the one being a 2 1/2 story frame weatherboarded dwelling house, with basement, and a barn, comparatively new; bank barn, dairy, wagon shed, corn crib, hog house, &c.; the other being a 2 1/2 story log frame weatherboarded dwelling house, also with a good basement, stable sufficient for one horse and two cows; spring house, hog house, hen house, wood house, corn crib, &c. Both said sets of buildings have never failing springs of water conveniently located to them. There is also running water at the first mentioned barn and dwelling house by means of pipes from a fine spring of good water on the premises. This farm is situated in Westminster district, Carroll county, Maryland, about 100 yards from the "Stone Road" and about one mile from Beeg's P. O., on the Littlestown turnpike, and is also about 5 miles from Westminster and one mile from the village of Pleasant Valley, and adjoins the lands of John T. Lawver, "The Samuel Miller farm" and others. The convenient location of this property to schools, churches, stores, &c., and the fine quality of the land make it a most desirable farm and worthy of the attention of purchasers.

Terms of Sale.--One-third cash on the day of sale, or on the ratification thereof by the Court; one-third in nine and the other one-third in eighteen months from the day of sale, the credit payments to be secured by the notes of the purchaser or purchasers, with approved security, bearing interest, from the day of sale.

LEWIS D. WANTZ, Trustee. John Milton Reifsnider and Michael E. Walsh, Solicitors for Trustee.

R. C. Mathews, Auct.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Notice is hereby given to the creditors of John C. Wantz, late of Carroll county, deceased, to file their claims, duly authenticated, with the vouchers thereof, with the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Carroll County within two months from said 10th day of September, 1896.

LEWIS D. WANTZ, WILLIAM H. T. YINGLING, JONAS E. HILTEBRIDLE, Trustees.

MAYBERRY SUNDAY SCHOOL will hold its celebration in Mr. Marker's grove, on Saturday, September 12th. A band of music will be present. aug23

Select Story.

IN THE TIME OF ROSES.

From the Baltimore Telegram. [The following story is by Miss Zella Henning, of Baltimore, a niece of Mr. D. N. Henning of this city. Miss Henning is a frequent visitor here. EDITORS ADVOCATE.]

A strip of meadow dotted with flowers stretching away to the sea, and marked here and there by a gnarled apple tree. In the foreground, a slim girl in a gown of a dainty blue, crimson roses at her waist and nestling in her shining hair; arms, white and rounded, hanging loosely by her side, and her dark, heavy eyes looking dreamily out over the water.

Just in front of her, his tall, athletic form outlined strikingly against the rolling sea, a young man stood, pleading his love. The lapping of the waves on the shore, and the distant cries of the sea-birds, were the only sounds to break the peaceful stillness of the scene.

"And you will not forget me, Gladys?" The girl's eyes were turned slowly toward him, full of a strange plying sadness, while half unconsciously her restless fingers began pulling to pieces the flowers in her belt.

He stretched his hand out demurely, saying in a caressing voice, "Won't you give them to me?" For answer, she broke off a spray of the blushing roses, and held them out hesitatingly.

He took her hand together with the flowers, and pressed it passionately to his lips.

"Do you mean that you will consider it, Gladys?" She looked up longingly into his face, her own quiet pale, and her sweet eyes full of tears.

"It is better as I said, Lucien, you will soon grow to think of me only as your little friend, and I--I shall go on as before, no, not as before, for I shall remember that you once loved me."

"So you persist in sending me away, dear?" She bowed her head sorrowfully, saying in tones low and brave, as if to convince herself, "It is best."

He stooped suddenly, and kissed her reverently on the brow.

"If you are ever in need of a friend, Gladys, send for me, and I will come, if it be from the ends of the earth!" Then he strode off toward the sea, placing the flowers in his coat as he went leaving her standing alone among the roses.

Lucien Overleigh first met Gladys Marsden in the little sea-coast town of St. Leonards. He was accorded quite a rising artist in London, and had been a dapper figure in society that winter. But he had dropped his work in the height of the season, and had come to St. Leonards at the advice of his physician, for a brief rest. Wandering along the beach one sunny day in June, he had come upon Gladys and her little sister sitting on the sand, Gladys reading aloud and her small companion leaning against her shoulder, listlessly watching the sails out at sea.

Something in the girl's tender manner to the child beside her, and the rare sweetness of her smile as she turned to answer a question, caught Overleigh's fancy, and he began to think of some plan for approaching her. Suddenly a thought struck him. Walking quickly up to her, and raising his hat deferentially, he inquired the way to the hotel, explaining that he was out sketching, and had wandered so far, he had forgotten the way back.

Gladys tried to direct him, but finding it difficult to make the way clear, said: "It is quite time for Mab and I to be at home, and as our paths lie in the same direction, you may walk along with us if you like."

Quick to avail himself of the opportunity, Overleigh replied: "If you will allow me," and then gently assisted the little lame girl to rise.

"Wouldn't you like to ride on my shoulder, Miss Mab?" he asked gently.

"Oh so much," came in a bright, little voice; and then, "if Gladys does not mind."

"I am afraid she will tire you," her sister said blushing brightly.

But Overleigh laughed at the idea, and shouldered the poor little creature crutches and all, to his intense satisfaction and Gladys' amusement.

So they wandered on along the leafy lanes, Overleigh making an occasional inquiry about the places they were passing, and Gladys answering in monosyllables, until their ways separated. Then, placing the child on the ground and thanking Gladys profusely for her kindness, he lifted his hat, and walked off down the road whistling an air from "Trovatore."

This was but the beginning. As the days passed on, it became quite a matter of course for Overleigh to meet the two sisters in his daily walk, and stroll along the beach with them, telling wonderful stories about the ships to Mab, and now and then winning one of Gladys' charming smiles.

One time, after speaking of his busy life in London, he asked: "Miss Gladys, have you always lived in that picturesque cottage on the hill?"

"I will tell you all that I can remember, Mr. Overleigh, but it isn't much. Would you care to hear it?"

Overleigh's answer was an eager assent, so Gladys commenced.

"I was born several miles from here, in a gloomy house called the 'Towers.' My father was very fond of travelling, and would go off for months at a time, leaving my mother and me in the great, lonely house with the servants. One night, I remember it so well, I was about eight years old then, and Mab was a baby, I was sitting in my little chair beside a mother, watching the flames leap brightly up the chimney, and singing softly to myself as children do, when the door bell rang violently, and the maid brought a telegram up to my mother. It said that my father was dead; he had been instantly killed in the terrible railroad disaster of 18--"

"I have an indistinct remembrance of being taken away that night in a carriage, and the next morning I awoke in the cottage on the hill, with my old nurse bending over me. I never saw my dear mother again."

"They told me that she was constantly ill, but when I became older I learned the truth. She was insane. Insanity had run in her family for generations."

Gladys' voice grew low and tremulous, but she kept on.

"Mab has known no other home but our present one, and here we passed the long days playing together, until she had the terrible fall which made her sick so long." Then Gladys laid her hand lightly on her sister's head, "and made me, oh, so old."

When Gladys ceased speaking they walked on in silence. Then Overleigh, looking at his watch, said it was time for him to turn back.
