In the Car Kitchen.

The actual standing room in the car kitchen consists of an aisle only wide enough for two men to pass each other and about fifteen feet long. On one side is an unbroken row of ranges, the very best sort invented, for when men do women's work they are not content with makeshift tools.

On the other side is a steam table for keeping things hot, other tables and some of the refrigerators, for there are many. Hot water and cold is held in cylinders which lie along the ceiling and look like the projectiles used on torpedo boats.

One refrigerator is devoted exclusively to fish, which he shining on blocks of clear ice as tempting as in any fish market. Until I had actually seen this refrigerator I had been in practice to refuse fish in traveling, feeling there was some mystery about its preservation, but now—indeed, no such thing. I had fancied the whole menu cooked at once in enormous quantities, like a soldier's mess at camp, and my fastidious car appetite had revolted and faded away during the first course, but now I eat with relish, knowing the condition of the source of supply.

Another refrigerator is entirely for meats and game, another for fruit, and even bread and cake are kept in a refrigerator that they retain their moisture. Outside the kitchen there is a sacred icebox under lock and key, and no man may put his hand therein except the steward or house-keeper of the dining car. There 23 kinds of wine are kept, and there will be shown to you, with a manner averted but proud, the royal family of champagne with cool, gold crowned heads sitting on an icy throne.

But, to go back to the kitchen, that apartment is occupied by three men all in white, with perhaps a blue cordon for tradition's sake, who serve deftly and capably the hivetal of waiters that swarm at the open square at the inner end of the room. It is a wise provision that prevents close contacts, for cooks are apt to be "redhot" at the crucial hour of dinner serving, and, besides, the car kitchen can contain no more men than the three cooks, who boil, roast, stew and fry the numberless fancies of the patrons' palates. These men work hard. The head cook, whose salary is about $70 per month, stands farthest from the window where the waiters clamor and is a bit more serious. The middle cook, on $45 salary, is lively or submissive according to the man he addresses, and the end cook finds time to chaff the owners of the dark faces who call orders, and sometimes he sings as happily as a conceited boy who fancies his future on the operatic stage.

These three men make up the white capped trio we see peering out of the windows of the dining car as it slips into the station. All the other employees of the train come into contact with passengers and have interesting experiences, but these are confined in the galley and are eager for scant glimpses at the station. Sometimes the car has a little balcony at the end, where they can escape the heat of their quarters, a needed relief in summer time.

The waiters have a pantry adjoining the kitchen and opening into it only by the little square window with a counter on either side. When your order is given and the waiter disappears, this is where he has gone. Here are kept supplies of dishes and silver, and here it is the waiter makes up the dishes of cakes, fruit and cheese you call for with which to tie up the ends of your appetite.

Before the dining car is drawn away from the curyards the special housekeeper who has it in charge must see that every sort of supply is on hand and in sufficient amount to last the journey. Sometimes there are ninety persons to feed, sometimes one-third that number, but the probable number on the various runs is known. In long journeys there are commissary stations along the way where the car may be re-stocked, but this is seldom necessary except at such perishables as cream and milk. Have you ever heard a porter apitating that subject with station employees at Buffalo or elsewhere? That means the emergency has arisen in the dining car. Such things might easily happen in a larger train where demands are irregular and marked by the whims of the passengers. It is a wonder they do not happen often when we reflect that economy in perishable things is exacted from the steward housekeeper.

Just before he sends his black commissary to announce dinner to the hungry passengers every man slips on jacket of cotton or white flannel and by this little act of ostentation is converted at once from the nondescript man of the streets into the most spruce of servants. Then, with everything ready in the kitchen and with his flock of assistants about him, the house-keeper of the dining car awaits the coming of his guests. And in they come, thoughtful blessing takers, with never a reflection on the hours of preparation by the army of men that it has taken to give them the degree of comfort which is purchasable for a dollar bill.

A Place to Sleep.

A sensible young lady made the following request of friends: "Do not lay me down by the rippling brook to sleep in death; let babbling lovers wake me up from my dreams; nor in the beautiful corners of the valleys, lest lightseers coming over epitalms, distract me; but let me sleep under the counter of the merchant who does not advertise in the local newspapers. There is the place that passeth all understanding, and a deep sleep on which neither the boyhood football of youth nor the weary shuffle of old age will intrude.

The annual report of the Superintendent of Education in Mississippi shows the total enrollment of the schools for the year as 357,488 pupils, as against 359,545 for the session of two years ago, an increase of 27,942, and of this increase 15,978 were negro pupils and 11,964 white pupils; the total enrollment 179,142 were whites and 208,346 were blacks, the latter forming about 56 per cent. of the total school enrollment. The Government census of 1900 credits the negro in Mississippi with forming 59.1 per cent. of the total population.
