IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Something About the Soil, Timber, Foreman, Cattle, Crops and Farming in Southern Luzon, and About the People.

Mr. Wm. H. Beer, Jr., of Westminster, late corporal of Troop G, 6th United States Cavalry, was discharged at San Francisco, California, on December 21st, and returned home about two weeks ago. He has a certificate of service well rendered, of sound health and appearance, ready for resumption. He enlisted in December, 1898, and was stationed at various points in this country until March, 1901, when Troop G and several other companies of the regiment were ordered to the Philippines.

They sailed from San Francisco the same month, going by the Southern route, touching at Honolulu, and landed on the island of Luzon April 20, some miles south of Manila. The companies were landed at different places by lighters.

Mr. Beer was asked a number of questions about the Philippines, by a representative of THE ADVOCATE, and talked interestingly of the section where he spent the eight months in Luzon.

"In the section where our troop was campaigning," he said, "the land is rolling, hilly and mountainous, with large proportion of lowlands. It could be made to yield largely, with proper cultivation, and several crops raised a year. Only a small portion is cleared and cultivated, and rice is the chief crop, though sweet potatoes, corn, tomatoes and other vegetables are grown. The corn is small, owing to lack of proper cultivation, but is excellent in flavor. The sweet potatoes are small, tough and stringy. The soil is dark, and very productive, and nutritious grass grows spontaneously, attaining a height of six or seven feet. It is fine for horses and cattle. Farming is the most part very crude. The Philippines have small plots, and the ground is not plowed more than two or three inches deep. The plow is drawn by a carabao, an animal much resembling the Sacred Cow. They are slow but very intelligent and docile animals. Besides the plow the hoe is the other farm implement most used, the two constituting about the complete stock on the farms.

"The carabao is a fine beef animal, yielding tender, juicy meat. I have seen some splendid specimens. The horses are quite diminutive, compared with American horses, and average less than four feet in height. They can move along lively, draw a two wheel covered vehicle, loaded with several people, or carry a man upon his back long distances.

"There is much timber in Southern Luzon, all hard woods, black mahogany and ebony predominating. Some of the trees are immense, and out of a single log the natives construct a canoe large enough to carry fifteen to twenty men.

"A fine gray stone is found, which is used for foundations for the houses of the intelligent well-to-do class. It is soft when first taken out of the ground, and readily becomes hard upon exposure to the atmosphere.

"What kind of fish have they? Well, there is quite a variety. The Spanish mackerel is the chief food fish. They grow quite large, and I have seen them three feet long. They are a fine food fish. Lobsters and crabs are abundant, the latter being larger than the crabs of Maryland waters.

"Yes, they have poultry, chickens, ducks and geese. They are like our own, or at least I did not notice any difference. The game chicken is the favorite, for the average native likes a chicken fight, and it is a common sight to see a Filipino with a chicken under his arm looking for an antagonist.

"How do the natives live? There are several classes. The ordinary native lives in a cone-shaped house, without a chimney, built of bamboo and with thatched roof. They have no carpets and but little furniture. In fact the better class do not have carpets, but they have comfortable houses, with ebony floors, and well furnished with mahogany furniture. They have pianos, guitars, violins and harps. Their clothes and shoes are imported, and they dress neatly, making a good appearance. The lower classes wear a sort of slipper-shaped wooden shoe, and their clothing is often scant. Their clothes are made of the inner bark of cocco nut trees. It is a thin, closely woven material, resembling in texture coffee-bagging. All the people seem cleanly in their habits, and daily baths are the rule.

"The Filipino are a brown people, and short in stature. They have dark hair, and some of the women have beautiful, luxuriant growth. The women usually have fine figures and are very graceful. The men, too, are fair specimens of humanity, supple and active.

"There are few roads in the section I have seen. The well-to-do class use a sort of carriage, having two wheels and a top, but most of the traveling is done on horseback and on foot. The villages, or barrios, are small, and the principal stock in the stores, if such they can be termed, consists of cigarettes.

"Schools are maintained, and since the American occupation a number of schools have been established, with American teachers. The people are Roman Catholics, and the principal stock in the stores, if such they can be termed, consists of cigarettes.

"The rainy season lasts about six months. It is not a continual rain, but sunshine and showers alternate. The showers are frequent. The rains come suddenly and as suddenly the clouds disappear.

"As to when all the people will be pacified it is difficult to predict. I know nothing of conditions, except hear-say, as to other parts of the Philippines, but where I was it may be said that the natives do not seem to be automatically cut off. The moment of the car carries it past this point, and the current being renewed, the car resumes its journey. The rails carry the current, also the wheels, which are insulated from the axles through the magnets, and back to the rails again.

Kelly says with a 220-volt current he can speed his car 400 miles an hour. Cars for carrying the mails between big cities would probably run on the rails.

Male Beavers Dam a River.

The biggest beaver dam ever seen in Maine is now attracting hundreds of people to Caribou, on the Aroostook river. Two miles from the village the beavers have built a dam of logs and mud 250 feet long, turning the river back upon the lowlands for a distance of three miles and thus creating a great lake. Trees a foot in diameter have been cut down by the beavers, the branches trimmed off and the trunks in neat rows. Their case is simple and unanswerable.

They point to the discriminating duties against American farm products enacted in Europe through resentment against our tariff exclusiveness, and they demand reciprocity. They point to the combinations which have extinguished competition within the tariff wall, and they demand a restoration of competition by a judicious lowering of that wall—that is, they demand Revision.

They point to the combinations which sell goods more cheaply abroad than at home, and to the tariff schedules enabling this they demand Reciprocity.

This program appeals to the common sense of the whole American people. It appeals to the self-interest of all of them except the few who profit so enormously by the tariff injustices. It promises fair trade at home, wider trade abroad. It promises to preserve, promote and prolong prosperity. It creates an issue that cannot be befogged.

From the New York World.

The farmers constitute considerably more than half the voting strength of the Republican party. In the big Western States the farmers practically are the Republican party.

The demand for revision of the tariff comes from the Republican farmers, especially from the intelligent, progressive Republican farmers of the almost wholly agricultural States of the great Middle West. Their case is simple and unanswerable.
