The boy had been dependent for sometime. He tied his feet together at the ankles with a strap, placed a rope about his neck and attached the other end to the curtain pole. A stool nearby showed that he had used this to jump from in order to hang himself.

BERNARD FOWLER FOUND DEAD.

WAS FOUND ON GARRET STEPS 48 HOURS AFTER HE DIED.

He Died From Hemorrhage—Blood Stains Were Found in Every Room.

Supposition that Bernard Fowler had been foully dealt with was caused Sunday by the finding of his dead body in an unfinished house on Fair Ground Hill, near the city limits, which he recently purchased. His home was near Corbin's Mill, more than a mile further away, but he had placed a lounge and covering in the kitchen of the house where his body was found, and in the habit of sleeping there. The condition of the place appeared to indicate that a struggle had occurred. The floors in every room were tracked with bloody footprints, there was a pool of blood on the covering of the couch, the doorway was smeared and wood beside the stove was sprinkled with it. Mr. Fowler was last seen on Thursday afternoon, and it is supposed that he was dead about 48 hours before being found by Walter Noel and Grant Beaver.

He was found lying on the stairway leading from the second story to the garret, with a crucifix lying beside his feet. Monday night a jury consisting of Thomas Lindsay, Milton Swartzbaugh, D. C. Yingling, Jerome Dell, Charles Snyder, Benjamin F. Yingling, Wm. A. Noel, John A. Arbaugh, James B. McQuay, Frank Tawney, Charles Brown and Harry Groft summoned by Justice Edwin W. Shriver, acting as coroner, investigated the cause of death and concluded that it was due to hemorrhage, brought on by swallowing blood from the socket of a tooth which had been extracted the day before. It was known that bleeding from this had been profuse, and medical testimony was to the effect that swallowing the blood had caused violent vomiting and hemorrhage of the lungs. While bleeding thus, Fowler had wandered all over the house and finally sank exhausted and dying on the stairway.

Fowler was a son of the late Andrew Fowler, of this city, and is survived by a number of brothers and sisters, who are as follows: Wm. R. Fowler, Mrs. Wm. Riley Myers, Mrs. Edward Awalt, Mrs. Theodore Taylor, Miss Josephine Fowler and Charles Fowler. He had been married, but his wife has been dead several years.

An only child, a son, Charles Fowler, about 14 years old, attending school at St. Mary's Industrial School, in Baltimore. Ten or fifteen dollars of the money he was known to have on his person was missing, but it was thought that he spent a portion of it and lost the balance of it, and may have been stolen from him. The verdict of the jury was that he died from natural causes. He was 48 years, 1 month and 26 days old. He was a carpenter by trade.

His funeral took place on Wednesday morning, at St. John's Catholic Church, Rev. J. C. Mallon conducting the services. Interment in the cemetery adjoining the church.

The pallbearers were Gloyd Lynch, M. John Lynch, George Shriver, Jos. E. Boyle, Wilber Weller and Meade Ohler. F. C. Sharrer funeral director.

The Janitor Got Hot.

The ire and indignation of a certain Albert J. Ranull appears to have been aroused by the following mild and unassuming statement in our issue of February 3, last:

"A number of our heavy slumberers were awakened on Tuesday morning by the ringing of the Catholic Church bell at 5 o'clock (which was intended for 6) and hustled out to prepare for their business during the day. After finding they were aroused one hour earlier than usual they were very much disgruntled."

Now the bell did ring an hour earlier than usually does, and many people who have to get up early, did hurry to their work and were naturally upset when they found they gained either an hour on the day or lost one on the night. But this fact seems to have been overlooked by the correspondent of the American Sentinel, who apparently wrote it:

"There is an old saying, old but true, that there are but few people that know how to mind their own business, and it is to be feared the Editor of the Sentinel cannot be numbered among the few. Also the Catholic Church bell is not a time piece, but a church bell and the Editor of the Advocate does not have to arise by it if he does not wish to but can use his own pleasure, and not bother his head if the bell rings at midnight."

Yours very truly, ALBERT J. RANULL, 50 E. Main St., Westminster, Md.

In view of the fact that the Editor of the Advocate is not noted for early rising, as for minding its business the Advocate was strictly at it, when it gave a piece of news. But by the way, who is Mr. Ranull? Could it be that he is the janitor, who made the mistake?

INSTRUCTIVE TEACHERS' MEETING.

SAME OFFICERS WERE ELECTED FOR THE COMING YEAR EXCEPT SECRETARY.

Superintendent Simpson Gave a Few Good Points on Getting Good Benefit from the Teachers' Institute.

The Teachers' Meeting held at the High School building of Friday, Feb. 3, was a very instructive one. Very enjoyable recitations were given by Miss Marie Shriver and Miss Ivy L. Fowler. Miss Elsie B. Koztzy, Mr. F. S. Jenkins and Mr. J. E. Pledge read instructive papers, giving their impression of the Teachers' Institute held September last. Doctor Simpson, in conclusion, gave a few very good points about getting the greatest benefit from the Teachers' Institute.

This discussion was immediately followed by a eulogy written and delivered by Mr. Charles H. Kolb, on Mr. Richard Lee Cauthorn, a member of the Teachers' Association who died recently. This eulogy was supplemented by a few remarks from the superintendent, in which he characterized the efficiency of Mr. Cauthorn. A motion was proposed and passed that this be adopted as expressing the sentiments of the society; and that one copy of these remarks be sent to the minutes, and still another be given to the press.

The Association then went into business session. The same officers who presided last year were elected for the coming year, with the exception of the secretary. Mr. J. D. Noonan was elected secretary for the coming year. The treasurer then read his report, concluding the business session.

Prof. Simpson closed the meeting with an address to the teachers. Mr. President and fellow-members of the Association:

"A few weeks ago I was one of a sad company of mourners who stood by the grave of an honored member of this body, Mr. Richard Lee Cauthorn. Many of you, doubtless, were not personally acquainted with Mr. Cauthorn; for, during the last few years increasing physical infirmity has prevented him from attending many of the sessions of the Institute and the meetings of the Association. But there are some among us who had the privilege of knowing him intimately—some, indeed, who like myself had been admitted to the inner circle of his character of this modest and gentle scholar, his earnest and faithful teacher, will not fail to be an inspiration to increased devotion to the work of the profession which he so dearly loved.

Young men have been at a greater disadvantage in the past, and of their life work than Richard Cauthorn. Before he was grown he happened to an accident, and suffered an injury which resulted in a permanently diseased condition, rendering him a cripple and dooming him to a life of pain. Three times he was taken to an operating table, only to gain temporary relief from his sufferings. Repeatedly he was compelled to give up his work on account of his physical condition; but always, when a slight improvement was manifest, he turned bravely to his task. Only last fall, at the earnest desire of the members of Mount Airy school, where he had previously served with marked success as principal for several years, he took up the less exacting duties of the position of first assistant. But, alas, the underling in the position of his first term he retired again to his quiet home in Howard county. Here, on the eleventh of January last, at the early age of forty-three years, he passed away into the Great Beyond.

Mr. Cauthorn came of a family of teachers. His father, a native of Maryland, his father, a taut in his native state of Virginia, where his father had been a teacher before him. It is not strange that one sprung from such an ancestry should have become an educator in county and state alike. Both in this country and in Howard he made an enviable reputation as a teacher. Many are the youthful minds he guided gently into the pleasant paths of knowledge and virtue, of duty and honor—minds in which his memory shall be kept forever green.

In his youth, Mr. Cauthorn had not had the advantage of a college education. When he entered the profession of teaching he realized that nothing is so essential to success as a broad and deep foundation of scholarship, even though it may be demanded by the immediate needs of one's work. To gain such a foundation he set himself enthusiastically to work and accomplished results which, to those who know the disadvantages under which he worked, seem almost marvelous. In mathematics he made himself a master of arithmetic, he delved far into the intricate problem of algebra, geometry and trigonometry. But he did not confine his efforts to mathematics. In literature and language he was never idle. He gained wide knowledge of the standard English authors, and it is not too much to say that his knowledge of Latin was superior to that of the average college graduate. During the last two years he had taken up the study of French and German. In these, too, he had made progress, in spite of the fact that frequently recurring attacks of intense pain made hard study almost impossible.

In the drama of Julius Caesar, as Antony stands at the body of Brutus after the Battle of Philippi, he concludes a panegyric on the dead leader of the forces of the Republic with those words:

His life was gentle; and the elements So mixed in him, that Nature might stand up And say to all the world: This was a man.

This sentiment, I think may with perfect fitness be applied to Richard Cauthorn. Considerable as was his success as a teacher, admirable as were his attainments as an scholar, there was something in the man himself that was finer even than these. I think it was his maleness. Kindly, courteous, hospitable, patient and smiling even in the face of a slow and painful death, he was left an indelible impression in the lives of those who knew him best. Well may he have said with the Roman poet (had his modest nature permitted such an expression) "Monumentum exegi aere perennius." For in the hearts and minds of his pupils and friends he has builded a "monument more lasting than brass."

A Practical Farmer Appointed.

A new position, that of superintendent of the farm, attached to the Springfield Hospital, has been made by the managers. Former Sheriff Joshua Linthicum, of Anne Arundel county, has been appointed to the position by the board of trustees, of which former Senator John Hubner, of Baltimore county, is president, in office of which Governor Crothers is ex-officio a member, other members being Senator Johnnie Beasman and Mr. John O. Wadlow, of Carroll county; Mr. H. W. Forsythe, Sr., of Howard county, and Mr. Wm. S. Evans, of Cecil county.

The creation of the new position has come after a fight for years in the board, led by Senator Beasman, of Carroll county.

Members of the board who advocated the creation of the new position claim that the duties of the superintendent have multiplied to such an extent recently that it is necessary that he be relieved in part of his burdens, and that the farm management be entrusted to a practical farmer.
