Some 400 excursionists from York, Pa., received a big setback to a day of anticipated pleasure early Saturday morning, when seven of the ten cars of their train on the Western Maryland Railway left the rails at Maple Grove, 20 miles from their starting point. About four persons were hurt, but none seriously. Spreading rails caused the accident. One of the cars, according to a passenger, stopped just three feet short of a high embankment. Scores of women fainting from the shock, and for a time considerable excitement prevailed, but cooler heads maintained order when it was seen that no one was seriously hurt.

Many Baltimoreans have been curious to learn the identity of a young man, with one arm who has often been seen driving an automobile through the streets with as much skill as though he were not crippled. He is Nolan E. Basler, of Hampstead, Carroll county, teacher of a public school near Westminister, and one of the most enthusiastic automobilists in Maryland. He travels several thousand miles annually in his machine and has not met with an accident since he bought it, several years ago. Not only does Mr. Basler operate the car himself, but he does his own repairs. He has many friends. Mr. Basler lost his left arm in a gunning accident some years ago.
