THREE HURT IN FREIGHT WRECK

Western Maryland Trains Pile Up At Fowlesburg—Big Engine is Overturned.

A rear-end collision between two freight trains of the Western Maryland Railroad early Wednesday morning at Fowlesburg, about five miles from Emory Grove, resulted in slight injuries to three men and the overturning of big overheated engine.

At a late hour in the afternoon the wreckage had been cleared away and traffic between Hagerstown and Baltimore, which had been blocked, was resumed.

George P. Hyle, 1205 East Preston street, Baltimore, engineer, was scalded about the legs and bruised about the body.

J. W. Burke, Hagerstown, fireman, bruised. He escaped serious injury when he jumped from the cab of the engine, which was running at 15 miles an hour.

George Wadiz, Highfield, brakeman, bruised about parts of the body.

The accident occurred in front of the Fowlesburg Station, where the local freight was loading fruit consigned to Baltimore. On approaching the station Engineer Hyle stated that he did not see a flagman, who is supposed to be stationed about 100 yards in the rear of a train, and before the brakes could be applied the fast freight had crashed into the rear of the local freight, telescoping three cars.

Just before the accident Fireman Burke jumped from the window of his cab and succeeded in crawling away before the heavy engine toppled over on its side, bringing four cars with it. The wrecked cars immediately caught fire, but the Boring and Reisterstown volunteer engine companies soon had the small blaze under control.

Fink endeavored to straighten out matters while his bride-would-be occupied a chair in the clerk's office. He consulted an attorney, but nothing could be done until his divorce was obtained.
