FROM RAYMOND W. HAINES.
Spokane via Columbia River to Portland, Ore., by Raymond Haines.
I have seen some of the most beautiful scenery of my trip, also of the largest wheat fields that I have ever seen. The hills are steep and the roads had dust five inches to ten inches in which made traveling very difficult. The harvesting is carried on at a different time than it is in our country, as the grain is cut off and stacked at one time. The wheat is very hilly but very rich for farming. Through the wheat comes the fruit belt. Here I found the largest and best peaches of all I have ever seen. Some are as large as four inches in diameter. The fruit belt I came to the Pendleton which has the best roundup in the world, beginning the twentieth of September and lasting for several days. Here the old days are brought to life in the streets were filled with cowboys of all classes, among them were the best ropers and bull doggers that are found in the world.

From Pendleton to Dallas, Oregon, which is on the Columbia River, the trail or road is one hundred and twenty-five miles in a stretch of desert. Some towns are found along the road where irrigation is carried on. The chief crop is melons of all kinds. In Dallas, Oregon, is found the salmon canneries on the Columbia river, also the fruit belt is found here. Peaches are grown and canned by the Libby's Fruit Company. The canning is carried on similar to the corn canneries of Carroll county. The next place of interest is a town by the name of Hood River, where the Hood river empties into the Columbia and the main roads run to Mt. Hood, which is one of the loftiest peaks of the Rocky's and Cascades, also Mt. Adams and Mt. Jefferson are visible from this highway. Here the largest apple orchards of the world are found. From this town to Portland, Ore., I saw the most beautiful scenery of my trip. The Highway follows the Valley down for ninety miles. The river has cut its way down to a very great depth, leaving beautiful scenery on both sides of the valley. Here many waterfalls are found, one has a drop of 620 feet. These waterfalls come from the snow from Mt. Hood and other snow banks of the mountains. The road forms the figure eight at different places, making it possible to go over some hills, also the road is cut through or tunneled through solid rock for hundreds of feet, leaving some openings to look down at the river for hundreds of feet below. At the top of one of the hills is an observatory from which you can get a beautiful view of the valley for miles and miles. The scenery from this point differs to a great extent as the valley widens out making farming possible.

The city of Portland was reached from here in a rain storm, as it rains every day at this time of the year. The canning grounds were fair at this city, but are now under improvement. A free pass was issued to each tourist at the Hippodrome theatre, so a good show was enjoyed by all. From this city of Portland, I followed the Pacific Highway to the capitol, which is Salem, and then to Eugene. Around that city is some of the largest hop fields. The vines looked like the ones in the east, but produced a larger crop. Here the hop pickers were camped in all forms, some in tents, huts, autos, wagons and trucks. This trip was made in an auto and the best roads of my trip were from Dallas, Oregon, to Portland, and down the Pacific Highway, to Eugene.

BOY KILLED BY BULL.
Bellefonte, Pa., Sept. 25.—Attacked by a bull while they were driving some cattle in late yesterday, Reed Allison, aged 14, was trampled to death and his brother, Archibald, aged 10, was seriously injured. The boys had been sent out on horses to bring in the cattle on their horses near here and were warned not to dismount, owing to the danger from the bull. As they were unable to get the cattle together, both boys got off their horses and the bull immediately attacked them. The barking of a dog alone saved the younger lad, as it gave him time to crawl over a fence before the bull charged him the second time.
