KAUFMAN'S UNDERSELLING STORE

A. J. Drexel Biddle, Club Man, Nova Teetotaler

his costly stock of sherris, madeiras, Burgundies, champagne, cognacs and whiskies into a huge basket and threw them away. The value of the contents of the wine cellar at the Biddle home, 2104 Walnut street, probably ran into thousands of dollars.

Mr. Biddle told of his resolution to do away with his wine cellar at a meeting of his Bible class a few days ago in Holy Trinity Church. He said he had finally decided that a man is better off if he leaves liquor alone. He added that he had no criticism to make of men who do drink moderately. The news of Mr. Biddle's decision will be a shock to members of the sporting fraternity, who have attended the famous boxing matinees at his residence. On those occasions a table in the diningroom would contain beer, wine, whisky and other liquid refreshment. Those gatherings brought down a great deal of criticism upon Mr. Biddle from ministers, who wrote him stinging letters in which they freely expressed their opinion of a Bible class leader who entertained in that fashion.
