Three Great Supplements

With Tomorrow's Public Ledger (January 25th)

The Beautiful 12-Page

INTAGLIO SUPPLEMENT

The first two Intaglio presses ever built expressly for a newspaper were made for the PUBLIC LEDGER in Germany, where Intaglio printing was brought to its present state of perfection.

These presses are now installed and after much preliminary work the first Intaglio Supplement is ready for the public.

Intaglio printing produces the same result as delicate photogravure work, imparting a rich color, yet retaining the full values—the highest achievement yet reached in single color typography.

Demented Boy Guards His Grandfather's Valuables With Gun For 3 Months

Special to The Telegraph. Sunbury, Pa., Jan. 24.—Unable to get Harry Enders, 19 years old and partially demented, away from the chest of his grandfather, Peter Umberger, of near Dalmatia, relatives had the young man arrested and he was placed in jail in Sunbury. A lunacy commission will examine him. Enders was reared with his grandfather, who died recently without leaving a will. The grandfather never allowed his grandson to leave the farm, fearing that the boy's condition might cause harm to him. When the grandfather died young Enders brooded. He also took a shotgun and several revolvers, went upstairs and kept watch on the chest, in which were some valuables and $1,800 in cash. He threatened to shoot anyone who came upstairs and for three months no one came near the house. The relatives, becoming anxious, ordered his arrest, and Constable William High, using strategic methods, managed to take young Enders prisoner.
