Herd of Several Fine Animals From State Reservation Destroying Crops and Young Trees Near Mifflinburg

Mifflinburg, Pa., Feb. 2.—Several large elk, supposed to have escaped from the State reservation in the adjoining county of Center, have been causing damage to property and alarm to the citizens residing on farms near a very large cow. Passing through this neighborhood, and at the vicinity of Robert Moll, several residences saw an elk in the fields, destroying vegetation and concluded to chase it toward the mountain, which they did, or at least made the attempt, with the result that the beast was on the defensive and "made for them." In such a savage manner that the men ran, and for their protection took to the nearest place of safety, hastily climbing up a tree. Even then the animal made a lunge at the tree with its horns. They said that when the beast came to a nearby wire fence he stepped right over without the least effort. This elk has not only caused a great deal of alarm, but is destroying young fruit trees by eating off the tops, as well as destroying vegetation. It is said the animal weighs nearly eight hundred pounds.
