KAUFMAN'S MARKET SQUARE "UNDERSELLING" STORE

PRESERVING HISTORICAL TRAILS
 As he drove up to the White House in his prairie "schooner" a few years ago, I chatted with Ezra Meeker, a pioneer who went to Oregon across the plains in 1852. He had returned to Washington, D. C., over the same trail which he had traversed when he followed the "Westward Star of Empire" over half a century before. There was little left to remind him of the days of '52, but that return trip, made with slowfooted oxen, furnished an object lesson for the necessity of good roads, that no whizzing motors or dashing equipage could have taught. Although past four-score in years, Ezra Meeker started out to place monuments along the historical "Oregon trail," passing over the Rocky Mountain States, the Middle West and the Eastern States through deep and shallow fords, finding the least precipitous passes the safest way from water-hole to water-hole in the riverless deserts of the plains as in the old days. Bearded and gray, he could not resist seeking out the favorite resorts of game and fish as in the days of yore, passing through panoramas of rich pasturage and laden orchards, and a variety of climate and scenery furnished by no other trail on earth. When Congress finds time to give as much attention to the pressing necessity of providing good roads, and holds less closely to political trails, the people will appreciate its doing something for the welfare of all the country, aside from local and sectional bickerings over public building bills. Some day the American people will also wonder why Congress did not preserve for posterity the historical trails and landmarks of the early settlers of the great Western Empire, with good roads and other features of a substantial and enduring civilization, as well as tablets and landmarks. "A Fair at Washington." Joe Mitchell Chaplin, in National Magazine for January, 1914.
