

Women and Their Interests

ALL RELIGIONS MEET

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1914, by Star Company.

There are many faiths, many creeds, many religions in the world. All meet at one Great Center—the belief in an overruling Power, whether that Power be called God, or Allah, or Om, or The Nameless One, does not matter. Whether the devotees of these religions pray after one manner or another, whether they worship in churches or temples or in shrines, or in the open, does not matter so long as they are devout and earnest in their faith. And so long as they strive with uplifted thoughts to live worthy of the Unseen Presence.

But the greatest possible disaster which can befall a human being is to possess no faith of any kind; to live on this little earth, to gaze upon the millions of stars, to see the wonders of nature, and to believe we came into existence as the mushroom comes and pass as it passes.

A great surprise awaits such minds after they are freed from their bonds. They will find there is no such thing as death; and in other realms and through other lives they will be made to learn the lessons of eternity.

Imagine a man who has near relatives and dear friends, yet, through some optical disease, is unable to see and recognize them. He sees the animals and the trees, and the ocean and the fields, and some strange individuals; but he cannot see or recognize anyone who is near to him; anyone who desires to win his affections and to bestow favors upon him.

How sad would be his lot. And sadder still would be his fate if he refused to believe that such beings existed.

Man Without Faith is Limiting All His Opportunities

Such is the condition of the man who has no faith in the existence of any world or any home outside of this earth. He is limiting his opportunities for happiness and for helpfulness. No matter how great a humanitarian he may be, how earnestly he may be working to benefit his kind, he is missing the best and surest road to the highest achievement.

The constructive power of faith is greater than that which genius and industry combined can produce. No human brain, however colossal, can open up such roadways of endeavor as human brain, however colossal, can blaze through seemingly impenetrable forests.

Faith in one's self is admirable and effective; but when that faith is based on knowledge of one's divine inheritance and the consequent assistance of the invisible kin, it is well-nigh omnipotent in its force.

The man who is without faith of any kind is a tragic figure. The woman without faith is little short of a monstrosity. For, even as woman seems to be only wholly woman when enveloped in her feminine draperies, so the mantle of faith seems to belong to her by divine right; and without it she seems stripped of her sex charms.

If by unfortunate education or environment a woman finds herself with no faith, let her seek until she finds. An hour alone every day making the mind passive, the heart silent, for light (relaxing wholly and emptying the vessel of the heart of all human conceit and prejudice) will eventually bring results. From sources unexpected and by paths undreamed of understanding will come.

For all about us dwell the invisible helpers, ready to give comfort to those who are in sorrow, knowledge to those who seek light and relief to those who are in despair.

The one great, mighty creative power we call God sends forth these helpers to walk among men.

Strength, vital force, constructive power, insight, all may be obtained from these helpers by minds which are open to their influence.

And while the earthly pathway may be brightened and cheered by their assistance, gates are being opened and mansions prepared in realms just beyond for the soul that believes and understands.

Into those realms will be unbeliever also pass, but he will find himself with no home prepared, for the architect of those homes is faith. And he will need wander about homeless until he sees and understands and calls the architect to his assistance.

He Who Lacks Faith is Usually Unduly Conceited

The man without faith in anything but his own abilities is invariably, unduly conceited. He gives to himself the devotion and admiration which the reverent soul gives to God; and, from lack of a conception of anything greater than these honors, he fails to draw from the higher sources the magnetic forces which pour upon the mind that reaches out to the Infinite.

Would you develop to the utmost your best and strongest qualities; would you make the most of life's opportunities for usefulness; would you equip yourself for the largest sphere you can occupy here on earth; would you build mansions in the world to dwell in and would you obtain the most satisfying happiness possible?

Then set your mind and soul the task of cultivating a faith in unseen powers and divine influences.

Seek in reverence, and you shall find.

Think of yourself as part of these gorgeous and potential systems of universes which fill space. Know that our sun is only one of billions of suns; our world but one of billions of worlds, and all these worlds within worlds are governed and guided by order and precision. That consciousness alone should create reverence in the heart of a soul.

Unthinkable thought has produced these universes. Some power so great we cannot even imagine it thought of these universes before they were. You are an expression of this power. Your thoughts are either creative or destructive. They are tearing down or building something continually.

We build our future, thought by thought.

Or good, or bad, and know it not; Yet so the universe was wrought.

Thought is another name for fate; Choose thou thy destiny and wait; For love brings love and hate brings hate.

Thought like an arrow flies where sent; Aim well be sure of thy intent; And make thine own environment.

Nothing can bid thy purpose pause; Mind is the universe's cause; The Lord God thought, and lo! He WAS!

Let the God in thee rise and say; To adverse circumstance, "Obey," And thy dear wish shall have its way.

In one view it is shown made of blue linen with trimming of blue and white stripes, but there are numberless other ways in which an equally good effect can be obtained. Plain and checked or plain and striped materials, could be used and the model will be found a good one for all seasons; for the simple costume of washable fabrics and for the handsome one of taffeta, for taffeta is in vogue for this season we use the same model for silk and for cotton materials.

For the 12-year size will be needed 5 yards of material 27 inches wide, 3 3/4 yards 36, or 3 1/4 yards 44, with 3/8 yard 27 for the trimming.

HIGH SCHOOL CLASS OF '77 TO GRADUATE

Lebanon Commencement Exercises Include Many Interesting Features This Year

Special to The Telegraph

Lebanon, Pa., May 25.—Yesterday morning the Rev. Dr. Thomas Levan Bickel, pastor of St. John's Reformed Church, preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduates of the Lebanon high school under circumstances which distinguished this year from any other in the history of the school. In the first place the class is the largest ever graduated from the school, numbering seventy-seven boys and girls. At this year's service for the first time, the directors attended in a body, and the students all wore caps and gowns as heretofore, though for the first time the color was changed to gray instead of the conventional black.

The commencement exercises to be held on Thursday evening of this week, will also be characteristic of modern ideas, and will differ from former programs for such occasions. Of the entire class, only five will appear in the main program, but all will participate in the high school chorus in the presentation of the cantata, "The Wreck of the Hesperus," under the direction of Miss Florence Hauer, the musical director, and in which the solo parts will be rendered by Miss Mae Oberholzer, Miss Ethel Strickler, John Witmer and Leroy Donough. The annual address will be made by the Rev. Dr. Charles C. Ellis and Professor E. M. Balsbaugh, principal of the school, will award the L. E. Wetmer cash prizes to the winners. P. N. Hershey, president of the board of school controllers, will present the diplomas.
