$75,000 FIRE AT SWATARA STATION

Curry & Son's Flour Mill, Grain Elevator and Coal Yards Destroyed

Special to The Telegraph
 Hummelstown, Pa., June 1.—About 11 o'clock on Saturday night John S. Curry & Son's large flour mill, grain elevator and coal yards were burned to the ground. The fire was first discovered in the basement, and before help could be summoned the fire got such headway that it could not be checked. The Hershey steamer and the Hummelstown chemical company responded. About 500 people gathered from the neighboring towns. The light of the fire could be seen for miles. Two box cars on the railroad siding close to the mill was also burned. The firemen fought hard and saved the Swatara Hotel, the Philadelphia and Reading railroad station, and A. G. Stauffer's dwelling. Swatara has no water supply and water was pumped into tubs from wells and cisterns and thence thrown on the fire by the engine, and when the tubs were empty the engine had to stop until more water was secured. Piles of new railroad ties along the tracks also caught fire and were burned.

The mill did a large business and had just unloaded several cars of wheat. The loss is estimated at about $75,000, partly insured. The mill and warehouse will be greatly missed by the farmers, who sold their products there and bought feed and coal.
