Suits That Are Offered You Saturday at $12.50 Are From Regular Stock & Have Been Reduced From $16.50 & $18

Nothing the matter with the suits, the styles or the quality--the fact that every one is from regular stock is evidence of their worthiness. But--when there's a run on this line of styles and on that group of patterns and the season (from the manufacturers' viewpoint) has so far advanced that re-orders cannot be filled, the broken sizes must be dismissed to prevent an accumulation of odds and ends. For a little of this and that is undesirable in all well regulated establishments.

GOES TO BALTIMORE.—On account of the illness of his mother in Baltimore, the Rev. Henry W. A. Hanson left yesterday for that city. The St. Paul Baptist Church, corner of State and Cameron streets, which has taken on new life since the coming of the Rev. E. Luther Cunningham to the pastorate, is making very elaborate preparation for formal dedication. Extensive alterations have been made in the building and it now presents a very pleasing and attractive appearance. New circular pews have been installed, walls and ceiling decorated, auditorium carpeted, woodwork varnished; indeed, the interior of the building is very beautiful.

No colored congregation of the city has had a harder task to perform than the St. Paul congregation, but to-day the outlook is brighter than any time in the history of the church. No people in any of the city churches are poorer than the members of St. Paul, and no people have made more sacrifices, been more faithful and accomplished more in the interest of the cause of Christ than this humble people. The dedicatory exercises will continue for one week and the formal dedication of the building will be observed on the fourth Sunday afternoon in June at 3.30 o'clock. An attractive program is being arranged. The Rev. Dr. J. Wallace Green, of the Tabernacle Baptist Church, will preach the dedicatory sermon and St. Paul choir, under the leadership of Professor Harrod, will render appropriate selections.

BULL MOOSERS IN QUICK CHANGE ABOUT

Decide to Be For Local Option and Adopt Platform With Everyone Looking On

NO SECRETY ABOUT IT AT ALL

William Flinn Has Everything Done in the Open to Contrast With Democrats

The Washington party State committee just before adjourning late yesterday afternoon turned its back on its declaration on the regulation of the liquor traffic made last January and came out for local option with the county as the unit. This action was taken in the unanimous adoption of the platform containing the local option plank and it was buttressed by speeches. Last January William Flinn, who ran the conference as he did the committee yesterday, gave up his ideas on local option in favor of a plank which offered the initiative and referendum as the means of regulating the liquor traffic. Yesterday the committee made a flat declaration and Dean Lewis, the party's candidate for governor, made a speech in which he said that he not only stood for it, but if elected governor would work with might and main for the passage of a local option law and would sign it.

The Washingtonians adopted their platform differently from the Democrats. William Flinn went about the city chuckling over the failure of the Democrats to let their State committee pass on the platform and have a say about its planks. The Pittsburgh boss, who had concluded that the position taken last January was wrong, decided to "backtrack" and to do it in a way that would be in contrast to the other committee. And it was done, ostentatiously and with supporting speeches.

The whole platform business was framed up to be different from that of the rival State committee. Flinn, the candidates and members of the resolutions committee set up half the night discussing the planks and went at it again after breakfast. They called in some of the "elder statesmen" and about noon started to revise it. Finally, the platform was finished about 2 o'clock, half an hour behind the time for the meeting, and was adopted shortly after 4. Next to seeing that there was no ambiguity about the party's declarations on local option, woman suffrage and other things, Flinn was most concerned about thumping Senator Penrose and deriding the return to the party movement. He gave the keynote on Penrose in his own speech to the committee, which came right after Judge C. N. Brumm, of Pottsville, who had been staged to declare that he was for the ticket, although he went out first place. Flinn charged that the mills were idle to-day and business bad because Penrose had entered into a conspiracy to let the Democrats elect the President rather than allow the Republicans of the nation to select Roosevelt with whom he was not on friendly terms. Penrose must have been a most puissant personage in 1912 to have accomplished all that Flinn charged that he did. Dean Lewis, Gifford Pinchot and all the rest of the speakers took that as their cue and the senior senator was belabored as an evil genius, but at the same time given credit for tremendous influence when the United States was picking a president two years ago. Pinchot went Flinn some better in assailing the return to the party movement by saying all the overtures came from Republicans and that the Progressives would have none of them. He also gave the committeemen and workers jaded with weeks of a strenuous primary campaign the news that he intended to resume his campaign to-morrow and keep going until November. "I'm on the stump now and I'm going to keep on the stump. This is a time to work and not to go fishing" said he. And some committeemen groaned. Dean Lewis was full of ginger in his talk and hammered the desk as he declared for local option, for real regulation of monopolies against the Wilson policies, for protection and when declaring that he was against Penrose.

Throughout the meeting everything appeared to be on the table. It was a lame meeting compared to the Democratic session and lacked the spirit of the Republican State committee. The last half dozen speakers, all candidates, spoke to a dwindling audience and reiterated much that the topline had said. And the platform contained all that anybody said.

SHAKESPEARE THE MASTER "He sweeps with the hand of a master the whole gamut of human experience, from the lowest note to the very top of its compass, from the sportive, childish treble of Mamillius and the pleading boyish tones of Prince Arthur up to the specter-haunted terrors of Macbeth, the tropical passion of Othello, the agonized sense and tortured elemental grandeur, the titanic force and utterly tragical pathos of Lear."—From the Encyclopedia Britannica. BUSINESS LOCALS

THE LAST DAY

A suit is worn is what you want to judge it by, and not the first week's appearance. That is the real test of its goodness. A suit from Simms gives satisfaction until it is no longer fit for wear, because the garment is made to fit and the wearing away of material does not affect the shape. A. J. Simms, 22 North Fourth street.

BUSINESS LOCALS "DELIGHTED"

Back from the jungles comes this famous word to be quoted again almost daily. The same word will leap from your tongue when you look at your laundry work on its return from the Arcade, whose success is due to pleasing particular people. Both phones. The Arcade, D. E. Glazier, Proprietor.

THE OLD PAPER COLLAR

How many of the present generation remembers the wearing of paper collars in place of the present Troy-laundered collars? Very few, indeed, and the celluloid collar tried to supplant the paper collar, but neither stood a ghost of a show when modern laundry methods were introduced. It put Troy on the map, and Troy laundry work stands for the best in Harrisburg. Either phone for wagon.
