

THE TELEGRAPH ARTIST'S VISION OF HARRISBURG'S BIG CELEBRATION JULY 4, 1915, MARKING COMPLETION OF RIVER AND DAM IMPROVEMENTS

The Telegraph artist has caught the spirit of July 4, 1915, in Harrisburg and has here presented it for those who may fancy a glimpse into the possibilities of the future. Ed. S. Herman, in his address before the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce yesterday, called the attention of the members to the "great dual celebration of next year," when it is planned to celebrate the Fourth of July with a big river carnival to mark the completion of the dam and the river wall and steps. The steps will form the "grandstand" from which spectators will view the boat races, swimming contests and water craft parade on the lake-like surface of the river. The artist pictures the festivities at their height. All the contractors have joined efforts to complete their work this year.

ALL HARRISBURG TO JOIN IN OBSERVING INDEPENDENCE DAY

Municipal Celebration at 8:30 in Morning With Parade and Salute to Flag

And So Nobody Need Go Out of Town This Year to Have a Bully Fourth

ROUTE OF PARADE

Form in Second street, right resting on State, move down Second street to Market; to Third; counter-march to Market Square. First and second divisions will open between Market Square and Front streets, allowing the Mayor and other officials to march to the grandstand where the exercises will take place.

Unless one expressly wishes it, one need not go out of town to-morrow to help twist a rather famous lion's tail.

Along with some millions of other Americans the world over Harrisburg folks are ready to observe in an old-fashioned way that memorable squabble in the Anglo-Saxon family when Merrie England's youngest and huskiest child not only left the family fold to go out into the world and shift for itself but administered a perfectly terrible spanking to its mamma.

Next year a gigantic water carnival before the city's completed "front steps" may be the big event of the day.
