Help Love Pack His Trunk

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"When Love shows signs of leaving... Don't try by tears and grieving... To win him back! That way he'll only stay another day! Get out his trunk without delay—And smiling—help him to pack!"

Many of my girl correspondents write me sad little letters pleading with me to help them win back lovers who show signs of weariness. "My fiance doesn't seem sure whether he loves me or not," writes M. S. "His father wants him to marry a richer girl. He acts bored and restless every once in a while and leaves me—but he has always come back to me. Maybe he won't some day, and then how will I bear it? What shall I do? I feel as if I couldn't bear this uncertainty and longer. Help me, please, for I am almost crazy."

Are you brave enough to hurry your moment of reckoning? Do you dare offer your uncertain lover his freedom? If you could do this bravely and lightly, with no wailing or re-proaches, it might frighten your fiance into a wonder if you could have tired of him. And the fear of losing you might chain him to you as no sweet certainty that you will be there waiting can do.

Nothing is so dead as a dead infatuation. If he is really tired of you, he will resent any effort on your part to hold him in honor bound or to galvanize his dead love into life again.

This is your course if you are too uncertain and desperate with uncertainty to wait for love to come "back to you."

I firmly believe "Tho' love may go a-wandering for a time, he comes home at last"—unless he had died while traveling.

But don't be a coward and cry or whine. This will drive him away quickly. Smile and be sweetly desirable and unexpectedly unattainable.

Smile and say: "This is no cage with bars. Neither of us must act as if it were. Do you want to go?" Don't remind him of your dreams and plans of the love and happy thoughts of the kisses and all the dear sweetness of your happy love days. Just offer to pack love's luggage and wish him God speed on his journey.

Love could never go if this were done. Love would stay to remind you of all you had bravely pretended to forget.

And if he goes, make your life splendid in spite of him. For if he leaves you, you won't lose love—only a very poor imitation lover.

Put your self out of your unhappy uncertainty. R. M. S. Don't let a man play fast and lose with your peace of mind.

Facts you can face. Tinting at shadows will wear you out.

Miss Fairfax Answers Queries

DON'T TRY TO FORCE MATTERS Chicago, Ill.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am eighteen and employed in an office. During the two years I am employed I became acquainted with a young man of twenty. During our acquaintance, he has taken me out twice and several times came to my office to see me. When I meet him in the street, and he is with any of his friends he always gives me an introduction. When speaking to him through the phone daily on account of business, he speaks quite sensibly and mannerly and regards me as a friend. Now, what I want to know is, do you think he cares for me? I have taken a liking to him and want to win his love but do not want to jump at him like other girls and then be left out.

A CONSTANT READER. Do not try to force this young man to be any more attentive to you than he desires. Don't make any demands or give any evidence of wanting to chain him to your side. Men prefer to do their own courting. If you are always sweet, amiable and friendly without any attitude of ally giggling or of demanding as your right the kindness he now gives freely, I think his interest will deepen, since it seems to be very genuine.

INSIST ON AN UNDERSTANDING DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I have been engaged to a young lady since January and we were to be married in June. Now she tells me she loves me more than she did when she promised to marry me, but I can't get her consent to give up single life. Then, again, she says she can't live without me, and will marry me any time. What would you advise me to do? I love her dearly. We are both of marriageable age. X. Y. Z. I would advise you to assert yourself and not allow your fiance's whims to have their foolish sway. Insist on setting a definite date for your wedding or on breaking your engagement. Firmness is what you need.
