Coal Is Cheapest and Best Now

To buy coal now is to buy it at the cheapest price for which it can be obtained during the year. And then you gain in quality, too, for the coal sent from the mines at this time of the year may be thoroughly screened before delivery, a difficult matter in cold weather when frost will cause the dirt to cling to the coal. So to buy Montgomery coal now is to buy the best quality of the best coal at the lowest price. Place your order.

Harrisburg School Sketches

BY J. HOWARD WERT. No. 2.—How the Black Horse Tavern Became the Harris Park School Building. Some Faithful Teachers of the Past. Some Small School Buildings That Have Passed Away. Elections in the Old-time Schoolhouses.

In the last number I told of the time when the Boas and Verbeke school buildings stood forth in the freshness of their youth as the "ne plus ultra" of school architecture. Yet was not their erection accomplished without fierce opposition. The North Ward School Board came in for a vast deal of censure, for the tribe of "kickers" is no evolution of our present high-pressure civilization, but its members were as numerous and as clamorous in the sixties of the last century as now.

"What in the name of sense," said these croakers of a former day, "is the use of building an enormous schoolhouse up there in Billy Verbeke's marble where nobody much lives and where there won't be much of a town for fifty years to come?"

But Dr. J. H. Fager, Daniel D. Boas, A. Boyd Hamilton, Dr. C. Seiler, Charles Muench and their associates were not the men to be swayed from the line of duty by impetuous clamor. Soon the good seed they had sown in the erection of these buildings bore fruit in other portions of our city.

The Black Horse Tavern and the Harris Park School. In the list of school buildings of 1874, published in the last number of this series, appears the name Harris Park. But it was not the Harris Park building of to-day, but a large, rambling frame building, on the same site, that had been known for generations as the Black Horse Tavern, which had been bought some years before for school purposes.

A famous hostelry was this same Black Horse Tavern in the days when the river was brisk with arks and rafts; when the Conestoga wagons filled the pikes, being ferried over the Susquehanna at this point as they wended their way to distant Philadelphia; when other Conestogas, filled with "household stuff," were crossing the river here, pressing on, from thickly settled Chester, and Lancaster, and Berks, to found new homes and wood fortune amid the valleys of the Blue Ridge or along the headwaters of the Ohio; when daily the drovers were conducting vast herds of cattle through Harrisburg on the wearisome march to the seaboard cities.

One of the Black Horse landlords of this olden time was a certain Simeon Westfall, who had once been among the staunchest of the teamsters who crossed the Alleghenies to far away Pittsburgh. His daughter, a sunny lass, sported joyously through the halls of the busy hotel. A number of years ago the Harrisburg papers chronicled the celebration of her golden wedding as the wife of Emanuel S. German.

In 1874 the former hotel building was no longer in the days of its glory. In its dilapidation it had become both woebegone and dangerous. A very few years later the good seed of example sown in the erection of the Boas and Verbeke buildings bore fruitage in its disappearance forever, to be replaced by the present commodious Harris Park school building.

A Tribute to the Harris Park Teachers. But the teachers in this relic of former days labored as honestly and earnestly with the sturdy lads and smiling lassies of the First Ward as if they had been located in a palace with every convenience that the builder's art could give them. These teachers in 1874 were Misses Angie M. Patton and Lizzie Buehler, both married subsequently to prominent citizens of Harrisburg; Miss Annie M. Proemer, afterwards the wife of Lieutenant Howard D. Potts, himself one of the most efficient school directors Harrisburg ever had; John L. Bates, Isaac Lloyd and Frederick U. Worley. The three gentlemen last mentioned, after long and honorable careers as educators, have all passed over the river. Mr. Bates at the time of his death was an alderman in our city, while Mr. Worley had long held a responsible governmental position at Washington, D. C.

There is many a man and many a woman who, reading this article, will pause a moment to murmur a blessing on some one or more of the names I have just given as the Harris Park faculty of 1874, as memory recalls the untiring, patient, effective work of those teachers for the good of the tender minds committed to their care.

The Local Teachers. In the last number it was stated that the location of the new and most spacious school building of the city is now only used as an open-air school, an innovation of modern science and humanity unknown in 1874. It is but fair, before taking about some of the faculty of 1874, as memory recalls the untiring, patient, effective work of those teachers for the good of the tender minds committed to their care.

As to Finley I. Thomas, I will tell you nothing about him, for if you do not know that brave soldier, accomplished educator, and friend of every one, please call on him at the main station of Post St. O. R., it simply indicates yourself unkindly.

Small School Buildings. There was a time in Harrisburg, as in many other Pennsylvania towns, when either supposed economy or bad judgment made it akin to a religious duty to place all school buildings alleys where land was cheapest; and the narrower and dirtier the alley the better. That time had passed in 1874. But there were still many small buildings used for school purposes, some of which at least were poorly ventilated and not well equipped for school use. Three of these in close proximity were the Front street school, at the corner of Front and Mary streets; the Chestnut street building, at the corner of Chestnut and Dexterville streets; and the German building, on a portion of the present site of the Stevens building in Chestnut street between Front and Second. The two first mentioned have long since ceased to be school properties.

The teachers in the little Front street building in 1874 were Misses Jennie Robinson and Emma F. Hunter. Many, many years have elapsed since weeping friends passed before the coffin of Miss Robinson, who lay in her last dreamless rest in the audience room of Grace Methodist Church. It has been but a few months since Miss Robinson went to her reward. Both were noble teachers of whom it could be truly said:

"None knew them but to love them, None named them but to praise."

Elections in Schoolhouses. It was a rule of ethics in the olden time Harrisburg held all elections in schoolhouses if the election district was so fortunate as to have one. The "Young America" of that day never objected, for all schools were closed on election day and the youth who were so fortunate as to be enrolled as a scholar in a room used for polling purposes got a double holiday, as the next day was devoted by the janitor to removing the tobacco quids, cigar butts and other evidences of enthusiasm and patriotism of the voters who had saved the country for their party. The building at Chestnut and Dewberry was long the polling place of the undivided Third Ward, and there I have seen such staunch Democrats as B. E. Meyers and Frank Boehmer put up strenuous battle for their party against S. S. Childs, Charles H. Berger and other foemen worthy of their steel.

Joyful Anticipation of Motherhood

There is apt to be a latent apprehension of distress to mar the complete joy of expectation. But this is quite overcome by the use of "Mother's Friend," a scientific application designed to soothe the muscles and to thus so relieve the pressure exerted on the nerves, that the natural strain upon the cords of ligaments is not accompanied by those severe pains said to cause nausea, morning sickness and many local distresses. This splendid embrochure is known to a multitude of mothers. Many people believe that those remedies which have stood the test of time, that have been put to every trial under the varying conditions of age, weight, general health, etc., may be safely relied upon. And judging by the fact that "Mother's Friend" has been in continual use since the days of our grandmothers, and is known throughout the United States it may be easily inferred that it is something that women talk about and gladly recommend to prospective mothers. "Mother's Friend" is prepared only in our own laboratory and is sold by druggists everywhere. Ask for a bottle to-day and write for a special book for expectant mothers. GIRL IN THE MOON

Of all the vaudeville acts that played the Orpheum last season none won greater favor than The Girl in the Moon, a beautiful spectacle in which a young lady with beautiful face and excellent voice sails out over the audience seated on a quarter moon that was aglow with light. This act returns to the Colonial to-day to complete the week at the busy corner, and will undoubtedly pack the house at each performance. This is the last day on which to see the local moving picture showing news events of the past week in Harrisburg. This picture shows the Fourth of July parade and flag-raising, the Governor's Troop in camp, the children at the camp on McCormick's Island, the new club house of the Civic Club, and many other things that are worthy of the Colonial's first "weekly."—Advertisement.
