WANTS $5,000 FOR DEATH OF HUSBAND

Widow of Farmer Killed by Hunter Brings Suit to Recover Damages

Special to The Telegraph
 Selingsgrove, Pa., July 28.—While out on a hunting trip last November, M. L. Kreeger, of Globe Mills, above here, had the misfortune to shoot and instantly kill John Haines, a farmer, on whose lands the party were hunting.

This week Haines' widow instituted suit in the Snyder county courts to recover five thousand dollars damage for the death of her husband. Kreeger runs a big flouring mill at Globe Mills, near Middleburg, and is wealthy. In her declaration, Mrs. Haines alleges that Kreeger was negligent in the use of firearms, that if he had used due care he could have seen Haines and the accident never would have occurred.

E. E. Pawling, a Selingsgrove lawyer, has been employed by Mrs. Haines and declares his client will fight the case to the finish. Mrs. Haines alleges that Kreeger promised to take care of herself and children and that her delay in instituting suit was caused by her reliance on Kreeger's alleged promise to do what was right. The case is arousing a great deal of interest and will be tried at the September term of court.

Franklin County Farmer Adopts Quaint Old Method of Sowing Rye on Big Field

Special to The Telegraph
 Waynesboro, Pa., July 28.—D. Y. Snowberger, near Waynesboro, has just finished planting his rye and believes he is the first in the county to do this. Mr. Snowberger, who has been a very successful farmer, adopted a very old method of sowing his rye. The tied up the ears of his horse, climbed up on the animal and rode it all over an eighteen-acre field, casting the rye with his hand over the soil from this vantage point. The ears were tied up to keep the seed from falling into them. Then he had his men come after him with plows and bury the seed in the ground, there to remain until it germinates to produce a big crop next year.

COULDN'T SEND THE PULMOTOR TO SAVE A LIFE WITHOUT ORDERS

Drowning of Bixler Boy Brings Facts to Light; Gas Co. Sends Machine

The death by drowning of Lerew Bixler yesterday afternoon in the river opposite McCormick's Island, brought to light the fact that under the system in force at present at the Harrisburg police headquarters it is practically impossible to send a pulmotor outside the city limits to aid in resuscitating persons apparently drowned.

Soon after it was learned that Bixler had sunk in the river and while rescuers were searching for the body, a telephone call was sent in to police headquarters here asking that a pulmotor be sent out, but the reply was made that it was contrary to rules to send the ambulance outside of the city limits without orders from the chief of police. About a quarter of an hour later a second call came in with the information that the body was still in the water but that a pulmotor was needed for immediate use when the body was found.

In the meantime, news of the accident having reached George T. Eldridge, who is connected with the Harrisburg Gas Company and whose son two years ago was drowned at McCormick's Ferry, he at once placed the company's pulmotor aboard an auto and drove to the scene of the accident, where searchers were still trying to recover the body. As soon as the body was brought to the shore the pulmotor was applied, but resuscitation was impossible. Other methods also were used without avail.

Young Bixler, at noon, after doing several chores about the house in the morning, said to his mother, "Now I'm going down for a swim in the river."

"Oh, you'd better not go," Mrs. Bixler replied, "you'll drown one of these days."

"That's the last thing that could happen to me," replied Lerew, who was known as an experienced swimmer.

His Toes Touch Body

Carefully they looked along the river bottom as they went up stream. The current at this point is not swift and it was believed that the body might not have floated down stream at all. This proved to be the case, for when Prof. Ellenberger again treading water, made his way up stream into the deeper and cloudy water his toes touched the sought-for object, and the body was then taken ashore.

It is believed that the youth choked to death when he went up stream, the effort at resuscitation failed to disgorge any water at all. Bixler ate a hearty dinner and it is believed that on reaching deeper water he got a mouthful, and that this upset his stomach causing the cramps. The body was taken to the home of Frank Oenslager and afterward removed to the home of his parents, D. W. Bixler, at 3360 North Sixth street.

Burial will be made at Fishersville. Services will be conducted Thursday at the home in Riverside. The Rev. Russel Dysart will officiate.

Colonel Joseph B. Hutchison this morning emphatically denied that the services of the city pulmotor was absolutely refused when Bixler was drowned near McCormick's Island. The Colonel said:

"The first notice of a drowning came from Mrs. Frank Oenslager, from an unlicensed repairman, a request to send men with the ambulance to help drag for the body. I informed Mrs. Oenslager that we had no grappling irons, or any person who could be sent. I understood that the body had then been in the water some time."

"Before leaving the telephone line Mrs. Oenslager was informed that as soon as the body had been recovered, the pulmotor would be sent; or if there was any likelihood that the body would be found very soon, the pulmotor could be had. Next came a call from Dr. George Burton. The body then was still in the water."

An Open Letter to the Members of the Woman's Club

Ladies:

Do you realize that not one person in a hundred knows what brand of matches they use, who makes them, or what they are made of?

What is worse, few people seem to care. They ask for "matches". The grocer gives them whatever kind he has in stock. If the heads fly off or the sticks break, they murmur "Well! Well!"

We are spending a great deal of money advocating the use of an absolutely safe, non-poisonous match. We want your co-operation and the co-operation of every other thoughtful man and woman in this community. YOU are vitally interested in everything that will make life and property safer.

Help us in the work we have undertaken—the introduction of the Safe Home Match.

Buy a box from your grocer. Test the matches in any way you please. Note that they do not spark; that the heads do not fly off; that the sticks are strong and sturdy.

Note, also, that Safe Home Matches are inspected and labeled by the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., and that they conform in every respect with the new Federal law, designed to get rid, for all time, of one of the worst of occupational diseases.
