Business Locals THE VALUE OF CREDIT

No matter how promptly a man pays his bills, a business man can always use credit to good advantage in a progressive business. He may wish to increase his business although his capital is small.

"MADE TO ORDER"

There is a lot of satisfaction in saying that your suit is made to order when some gentleman friend asks you where you bought the suit. It indicates that you are particular about the cut and fit of your clothes and want them to conform to your own figure in accord with the latest approved fashions.

INNER SATISFACTION

Miller red inner tubes are built for satisfaction. Quality regardless of cost is the basis on which they are made. They are pure gum, heavier and stronger than the average; exceptionally elastic, and do not lose their shape, and the value is doubly reinforced by a large, strong base, giving protection where it is most needed.

Passing Impressions of Finance

By H. L. Bennet

By LOUIS GUENTHER

Editor The Financial World It is the unexpected happenings which usually turn away all human calculations. Over on the continent industrial conditions were on the mend and in well informed circles the belief prevailed that a period of better business was in the process of development. The constant rise in English Consols until last week was considered a sure sign of the coming of a steady improvement. Now all these prospects have darkened by the threatening cloud of a far-reaching war in which all the great empires in Europe may become involved. War is hell, but hell would be nothing like what we have mentally pictured, compared to the holocaust and the misery which a conflict between Austria, Serbia, Germany, France, Russia, Italy and England would bring to the people of those nations, and indirectly to the entire world.

Racial aspirations more than politics is the train of powder which now endangers the world's peace. For years Austria has been trying to develop her empire toward the Adriatic and the Mediterranean Seas, but has found an unsurmountable obstacle in the little Balkan States. Russia, bottled up as she is, has also fondly looked in the direction of the Mediterranean, as a logical egress for her uncontrollable ambition for expansion. The two giants, bending their efforts in the one direction, seem now to be on the brink of fighting for this supremacy, be the cost what it may. Serbia is the pawn and the pretext. Only Germany and England, if they agree and stamp their foot down upon an open conflict, can prevent the clash in arms, the echo of which would reverberate throughout the civilized world. If the inevitable must come, and war does actually ensue, the United States would be the least affected. Temporarily, as a result of the conflict, we might prosper, for our country would become the bread basket of the warring nations; we would have to supply the nations involved, their armies and people with the bulk of their food-stuffs. This would occasion considerable stimulus to our industrial and agricultural conditions, keep the looms of our mills working busily, and as for the steel trade, war is war it must be, would bring large orders for new armaments. So the present, as usual, is a case where there arises no ill wind which does not blow some good for some one.

A heated trade war among oil companies has proven a blessing for owners automobiles. When gasoline but a year ago was selling around 29 and 25 cents a gallon, the price has been cut and cut again, until now in some places gasoline can be bought as low as 12 cents, and I have seen places in Jersey where it is advertised for as low as 11 cents per gallon. But by the owners of oil stocks the price war between the rival companies is not eyed with the same equanimity, as it has cut profits in twain and for the time being has reduced to nil all prospects of increased dividends. In fact, with the stockholders of some of the companies these difficulties has caused fears for the present dividends if the price war continues very much longer. As I predicted some weeks ago in these columns, the proposed reorganization for the Rock Island Company, whereby the collateral bondholders were asked to part with a third of their equity, has fallen through, and it is now expected nothing further will be done to bring about a reorganization until late in the Fall. The protective committee acting for the collateral bondholders majority of it does not represent the majority of the bonds, which is but another way of saying that not enough of the bondholders cared to tie up their collateral with the committee to make its plan feasible, and it is now inviting further deposits, declaring that any future plan will include the full right to the collateral bondholders to finance the property and put it on its feet. This is as it should be, for they are entitled to their collateral in default of interest and should not have outsiders endeavor to shave its value, as was the case in this instance.

More important to the New Haven shareholders in its final influences, than the government suit seeking the dissolution of their railroad, is the action taken in behalf of a large body of New England stockholders seeking to recover for the company the large amount of money it is charged the directors misemployed, and wasted. Most of the directors are among the country's wealthiest financiers, so that if judgment is recovered against them the New Haven could get the money awarded by the courts. A number of similar cases have been tried before, most of which turned out in favor of the stockholders. The case of the old directors of the American Malt Company proved a landmark in this form of recovering corporation loot, as they were charged with something like $500,000 at the time. They were charged with paying unearned dividends to boost the market price of the stock.

All our financial scandals have contributed largely to the broad municipal bond market. People who are timid, or do not even wish to invest funds in scandal free securities of the better grade, have turned their attention to standard municipal bonds and, on account of the extraordinary demand, these issues are selling above any figures they could command if conditions surrounding them were normal. No abatement in the demand for good municipal bonds is looked for among dealers for some time. August 1 draws near, and for the Gould roads, which have been under strong fire, the day is a fearful one, for it will determine for some of these roads, whether they will continue as solvent properties or whether their future requirements and financing will be worked out under the protection of the courts and with the professional services, at high fees of protective committees, as they are now organized in the financial section. When Mr. Ramsey, the ex-president of the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Railroad Company, until he had a falling out with George Gould, asked Samuel Undermyer why $3,000,000 was needed for the road, the latter replied himself as a champion of the minority stockholders, answered to pay the expenses of the protective committee for one of which he had counsel. I merely mention this incident to illustrate that with such high fees we all can don fighting clothes and make up the gauge for the "vox populi," as it is a very profitable championship.

Relief From High Cost of Meat Is Promised

Washington, D. C., July 31.—Relief for persons to meet the high cost of living is provided in the new regulations for Federal meat inspection, made public yesterday by the Department of Agriculture. The sale of "second-class sterilized" meat is permitted, if it is so labeled. The regulations read: "In view of the present shortage and high prices of meat, and the fact that every pound of meat that is condemned necessarily adds to the cost of producing meat that is passed, new regulations provide measures whereby packers can sterilize and cook thoroughly certain classes of meat and sell it in cans or sealed containers, labeled plainly 'second class, sterilized.'"

By this means the department states, much meat heretofore wasted can be safely utilized, and as the new product will represent practically a complete saving, low prices are expected to be charged. These regulations become effective November 1, 1914.

TWAS DIFFERENT THEN

[From the Philadelphia Telegraph] The conversation of a recent social session turned to domestic differences when Webster Brim, of Bucks county, was reminded of an incident that happened in a pleasant little home. One evening when hubby blew in at the sound of the dinner gong, the Congressman said, he found little wifery with a fret on her face, and her beautiful eyes damp with tears. Asked the cause of the sobs, of course, and was told by mother that he didn't love her any more. "You're foolish, Mary!" smilingly responded the old man. "What ever put an idea like that in your head?" "Before we were married," was the sobby response of wifery, "you used to tell me that I was worth my weight in gold. "I know I did, dear," admitted father, "but you must remember that you didn't weigh half so much then as you
