LOCHIEL ROW TO GO UNDER HAMMER

Famous Old Section of South Harrisburg Will Be Sold November 30

IS ROLLING MILL CO. SITE

Eleven Acres of Ground Will Be Exposed For Sale—Passing of the "Row"

Lochiel Row, that group of weather-battered humble little frame dwellings in South Harrisburg that has been the scene of so many visits of police and charity workers, is due to pass from the city map.

November 30, the "Row" with its forty-eight double story frame dwellings and the remainder of the eleven acres of ground owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and formerly the site of the old Harrisburg Rolling Mills, will go under the hammer at public auction.

"Lochiel Row" was built more than half a century ago when the hundreds of mill workers in the nearby steel plants made their homes there. From time to time the class of people changed and to-day most of the inhabitants are foreigners.

The "Row" as a district, has probably figured more in police circles than any other particular section with the possible exception of Sibletown. Several riots, a couple of murders, innumerable beer parties, crap games and so on have had their origin in that gloomy little section.

When the rolling mills quit business a few years ago the bulk of the inhabitants were forced to look up other quarters. That will become of the "Row" will depend upon the wishes of the purchaser, but it is believed that all the houses will be torn down. The ground will afford an admirable manufacturing site because of the railroad siding facilities.

While most of the tales that are told of the row have their origin in police court or charity circles, there is one story of the "Row" and its residents which has a place all its own in Harrisburg's history.

That dreadful night of the Lochiel wreck when a Pennsylvania train crashed into a car of dynamite and thirty or more people lost their lives, the people of the "Row" were first on the job to help the wounded and dying at their doors. Many a bleeding victim from the relief trains was wrapped about in the tattered blankets and shawls of the people of Lochiel Row.

Cotton Exchange Opens in New York City For Unrestricted Trading

New York, Nov. 16.—The New York Cotton Exchange reopened for unrestricted trading at 10 o'clock this morning. It had been closed since July 31, when the market went into convulsions and three firms failed through the demoralization caused by the impending war in Europe.

The floor of the exchange was thronged with brokers when the gong sounded. During the first few minutes trading was exceedingly brisk and somewhat nervous. There was some little confusion because of unfamiliarity with the new style contract and the new rules imposed on the market by the operation of the so-called cotton futures law.

Early trading was confined almost entirely to December cotton, sold on old-style contract. The market opened at 7.45 cents and dropped quickly to 7.40. A low level of 7.39 was reached in the first hour. The market then grew steady and the nervous tone departed.

GURGLING THEMSELVES INTO JAIL

Noise Deaf Mutes Made in Throat Case as New as Jewelry Thieves. John Woolley, 24 years old, and Thomas Meehan, 29 years, deaf mutes, were arrested in York by Detective Charles White Saturday on a charge of larceny. They are said to be jewelry store robbers and are wanted in Harrisburg. White Saturday was charged with stealing rings and watches and jewelry from F. G. Diener last July and later from the store owned by the Cummings jewelry store in North Fourth street. The peculiar gurgling of the mutes aroused the detective's suspicions and he poked his hand in their mouths and found the rings.
