FRATERNAL NIGHT AT STOUGH TABERNACLE

men to have special nights arranged for them was one of the strong reasons advanced by Dr. Stough last night for the probability of the party staying another week in the city.

He said the railroad men of both the Pennsylvania and Reading roads were desirous of having a joint special night, which would probably be a bigger time than any of the previous nights.

Another big occasion desired is a night for the volunteer fire companies of the city and neighborhood. It is also desired to arrange a Sunday school and church night, when all members will unite in one immense parade, with bands and banners, to march along the main streets of the city on their way to the tabernacle.

Dr. Stough said that neither he nor the members of his party nor the executive committee desire to prolong the campaign another week unless it is to be a great climax to the regular six weeks. He declared that God will make it plain to the hearts of those who are most directly concerned before this week is passed whether the field is ripe for a greater harvest.

In the preliminary remarks last night Stough said he is constantly receiving anonymous letters of criticism and as to how he should conduct his campaign, in all of which he tears up, because "a person who is not courageous enough to sign his name deserves no notice." The evangelist said he gives heed to all signed communications, and last night he read one that deserved notice especially on account of the intelligent appearance and nature of contents.

Says He's Not After Rich

This letter criticized him as being unduly harsh in berating the poor man's vices and stirring over the evils of the well-to-do and of pandering to rich people. It criticized him as not denouncing the rich men's clubs and private bars, "in all of which placemen are able to get on what they call respectable drinks at any time of night or Sunday or any holiday when the poor man's saloon is closed by law."

The letter went on to say that he should call down the prominent men who frequent these places, whether they be the Governor, the Mayor, councilmen or any other public officials.

In reply Stough said that he had denounced such places for the selling of liquor and he repeated all that he had formerly said: "These places," he declared, "are worse in their effect than the open saloon and no man who calls himself respectable has any right to support them." He emphasized everything he has said against drinking by persons high or low.

"I don't cater to anyone of wealth in this or any other town, nor do I cater of high position. If the Governor of this state or the Mayor of the city, or the councilmen, or anybody on Capitol Hill, or in any city office, is a member of the Harrisburg Club or any of the organizations mentioned in this letter, I say that person has no right to give his support and sanction to the serving of booze in those places. I don't know, of course, whether any of the men mentioned are members of these clubs."

Sixty-eight Hit the Trail

The trailhitters last night numbered sixty-eight, although the audience was the smallest during any week night of the campaign. Stough seemed rested from his labors of last week and preached with unusual intensity and put hard work into all parts of the service.

His sermon on "Kindness" was delivered especially for church members. He declared that Christianity is the kindness of God, something that the world needs more than anything else; that it is love in action.

Some Who Went Down the Sawdust

Among the trailhitters was a man in ragged clothing, unshaven and with all the marks of a tramp, who said he had no home and had just come into town and wandered into the tabernacle. He promised Stough that he was sincere in his conversion and would pray earnestly for God to give him a job. A bartender declared his intention to reform, and in pledge of his earnestness he called for his wife to join him. After a few minutes she came forward.

Stough was unusually enthusiastic in his little personal talks to the trailhitters and gave much practical advice. He told a number of women how they should try to persuade their husbands to follow their example.

Much amusement was caused at the beginning of the service by the presenting of boxes of hosiery to Spooner, Cartwright and Stough by the employees of the New Idea hosiery and the Moorehead Knitting factories. Stough untied his packages and displayed his socks and the long ones which he supposed were for the "Missus."

STOUGH CAMPAIGN NOTES

Sixty-eight persons hit the trail at last night's meeting. The total number of trailhitters to date is 4,176.
