Women Pledged To Spread Twilight Sleep Tidings

By ANNA H. WOOD. It is said that the agitation of the question of the Twilight Sleep for the women of America was brought about through the efforts of a gifted American woman writer, Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox. To use a popular expression, she put the "bee in the bonnet" of Miss Columbia after having seen and heard of the success of the system at Freiburg, McClure's magazine was the first periodical to bring it before the reading public through an article by Marguerite Tracy and several women's magazines followed suit.

Expert Service Needed

One of the chief objections against the treatment at present is the need of expert outside service. Many a woman unfamiliar with a hospital or for sentimental reasons, prefers that her child shall be born at home. However, this prejudice is passing away. Many women in the big cities, especially those living in apartment houses, have come to realize the difficulty of securing proper care where the worries of the household constantly intrude into the sick room and the many needed conveniences are lacking.
