Cowden Will Explain Dixon's Letter to Mayor

In a letter, Monday to Mayor John K. Royal, City Engineer M. B. Cowden says he will explain to the city's executive the meaning of the communication sent yesterday by Dr. Samuel Dixon, State Health Commissioner, relative to the city's sewerage disposal.

The city's permit from the State to empty sewage into the Susquehanna expired January 1, 1915. Mr. Cowden said to-day and in order to keep the State department's records in regular form, the State health authorities had simply requested the city to formally ask for a continuance of the permit.

"The statement in the morning paper that the sewage disposal plants are not ready is entirely untrue and was printed without warrant," said Mr. Cowden. "These plans were completed and set up to a great extent in department for approval three or four years ago."

Aunt Este's Stories for Children THE ADVENTURES OF FAIRY SILVERWINGS

SILVERWINGS STARTS DOWN THE MOUNTAIN STREAM Bushytail carried her down to a stream. Where fishes darted and butterflies gleamed. "Dear Fairy Silverwings, I am quite sad. I cannot swim, it is really too bad. So I must leave you to find your own way. And go back to my family, Fairy, good-day." So with a swish and a swirl he was gone. Silverwings sighed, "Now once more I'm alone. Pray who can carry me off down the stream. For if I must stay here long I'll surely scream." But before she could utter one word of protest. Up swam a big fish with gold fins and gold breast. "Come little Fairy and perch on my fins—I, you can see, am a creature who swims; I can carry you down the great wide stream. And I'll not let you drown, so please do not scream." Watch for the next adventure of Fairy Silverwings.
