BERKS CO. CERTAINLY IS PROUD OF ITS ZOO

Col. Henry W. Shoemaker, Newspaper Owner, Fostered Idea; Has Many Animals

Reading, Pennsylvania, with its beautiful mountain scenery; with its dozen playgrounds and public gardens; with skating rinks on top of a reservoir holding millions of gallons of water, where ice and roller skating is a pleasure whether it's Christmas or Fourth of July; has another charm, and among the little folks of this city with 20,000 homes and 100,000 people, the "sparkling diamond" among all the varied attractions is the little zoological garden at the foot-hills of Mt. Penn and almost in the immediate vicinity of the entrance to Mineral Spring Park.

Indeed, the zoo has not gained any great proportions, as to the number of beasts and animals, but it is just large enough so that the children care little whether Barnum & Bailey's circus comes around.

Such a zoo like Reading has would be a crowning feature for many a larger city, and if well managed is not too expensive for even small towns to maintain. The expense of the upkeep could be well paid, if the dividends would be created in the laughter column of the children's ledger.

Many a stranger as he found his way to this initial zoo of Reading, has asked the question: "How did Reading get a zoo anyway?" The one who is responsible for the zoo has hardly ever mentioned it to his friends, but Reading people feel so delighted with this little animal show that they think it is time that others knew how it really obtained bears, wolves, squirrels, raccoons, deer and elk.

To manage a zoo successfully you must have a good caretaker, suitable food and someone who furnishes the right kind of animals, whether wild or domesticated. When that is assured any town can have a zoo.

Some years ago Reading found just such a man who would furnish the animals. They had the money to secure the food, because the park board provides for that and, of course, the Reading park system is so well organized that they found the proper man to superintend the zoo and see to it that Reading children and the children of other cities who had come to be the guests of Reading children could always spend a couple of hours feeding peanuts to the animals and enjoy a good, wholesome hour of laughter while watching the squirrels, raccoons, monkeys and opossums in their tricks.

Newspaperman Donor

Recently Governor Brumbaugh honored Berks county by choosing two men closely allied with Berks county interests as members of his staff. Well, one of these men is responsible for the present zoo animal in the pretty zoological garden. This man, of course, is a newspaperman, and as a rule editors do not get any credit for what they do say, particularly if it is in the editorial column. However, Reading feels that here is an exception to the rule, and that to Colonel Henry W. Shoemaker it owes a whole lot. He was the donor and fostered the idea some years ago when he was still the owner of the Reading Times. After he went to Altoona he began to ship one cage after another, containing bears, wildcats and the like, so that today Reading children love him a great deal better than Santa Claus, for they realize that he is not a myth, and that what he drops down his chimney between Mt. Penn and Mt. Neversink is bound to stay.

The Reading zoo was started with three fallow deer, as they are known in Europe, their native habitat, and they are also known as cervus dama. Then someone thought the buck deer that was roaming in Carsonia Park was a most lonesome creature, so he was transferred to the zoo grounds. Next came three big cks, one known today as "Bill," who is certainly master of what he surveys, in his 100-foot runway, and who keeps the thousands of children guessing as to what kind of capers he will get off next.

All Kinds of Animals

Nearly are three raccoons that have afforded lots of delight for the little ones. The head of this group is said to be one of the finest specimens in captivity, weighing forty pounds, and he is about as cunning as his neighbors, the red foxes. The raccoons have an old tree in their pen, and around this they climb to the very top of the cage, and then scratch their backs in such a spectacular manner that they are the real comedy show of the zoo.

Their next-door neighbors are a colony of red squirrels, gentlemen of their class. They were brought to Reading from North Carolina, where they are known as "Sciurus Carolinensis." They are among the finest squirrels in existence, very cunning and large. The children have no trouble to get rid of their Reading pretzels and the Allentown peanuts when they are in the midst of these cunning little creatures.

Waynesboro, Pa., May 11.—The Rev. John A. Miller, rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Shippenburg, has been assigned by Bishop Darlington to the St. Mary's Episcopal Mission, here, for the summer months.

Have Flock of Swans
One large pen contains a pair of black bears and nearby are a number of prairie wolves with wildcats as neighbors, safely housed behind bars, who are gazing on the other side where three big horned owls are that came from Virginia, with a number of good old type Virginia opossums, who, under the animal kingdom of Dixie Land, are known as "Delphinias Virginiana."

So the rear of this zoo is a big pond belonging to the park system of the city and upon its waters swim some very expensive swans. Not as to maintenance, but as to the real money value, owing to the rare species they represent. Some were brought from England and others from the far north of America, and presented to Reading by William H. Luden, the candy manufacturer. Half a dozen of them are known as "Royal birds," being of the same species as are kept by the crown of England, which swim in the ponds along the Thames. So valuable are they that the King of England has employed a person who is known as the "swan-herder," to care for them.
