Miss C. Marie Strominger's Engagement Announced

MISS C. MARIE STROMINGER. Special to The Telegraph.

Mechanicsburg, Pa., June 30.—A pretty social event of the week was the luncheon of sixteen covers given by Miss C. Marie Strominger at 10 o'clock this morning on the porch at her home, 406 South Market street, to announce her engagement to S. Carroll Miller of this place. The appointments were all in rose color, with rambler roses in profusion. With the desert was served tiny pink and white evening slippers containing bags of rice in which were concealed miniature cards bearing the names of the betrothed pair. Music on the victrola and needlework followed the feasting. Assisting in the entertainment of the guests was Mrs. Bent Weaver of Harrisburg. Miss Strominger is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Strominger, the former a member of the Troup Music firm of Harrisburg.

Lumber Quality Or Price

Lumber should be bought on a quality and service basis. The first cost of good lumber is a little more than for poorer grades. "Cheap" lumber means "Cheap" quality—and usually ends in trouble. Lumber full of knots, sap and that is not solid, etc., will quickly begin to rot. We shall be pleased to advise you the kind to buy for the work you intend doing.

He felt the urgent sincerity of her request, and knew how deeply she was moved. But her concern was so obviously unfounded on fact that he could not help but believe it was a hysterical outbreak that would be dispelled when her overwrought nerves were quieted, and reason returned. It would be ridiculous, wrong, to sacrifice Myra to this hysteria, so he decided to be firm, and make no rash promise. He spoke: "Some old gossip has evidently been busy. We'll talk more of this when your nerves are quieter."

"No, we will talk of it now. WILL you?"

"No."

She turned, despairing-eyed and limp, and walked dazedly from the room.

The next morning Ethel kept to her room. Ray left for his office, the usual going gone from his gait, his face grave with the anxiety of the previous evening. He arrived in the city, and proceeded immediately to his work. Myra Foster was there, and her enervated movements as she went about her work showed only too plainly that her "bothersome cold" was not improved overnight. As he looked at her, saw her weakness, he noted the fine spiritual bravery that could send her poor, racked body about its usual duties, he felt keenly for her, and remembered with impatient vexation his wife's unjust accusation of the previous day. He decided quickly upon his course with regard to Myra's case, and spoke to her: "Miss Foster."

"Yes."

"Miss Foster, you are ill. You're in no condition for work at the present time in this or any office, and I'm going to send you and your father away. I have a place down on the ocean, where you can get a breath of fresh salt air, and where you'll have some of your old time strength and snap. So make ready, please. We can start just as soon as you can get your things together."

The matter, so far as he was concerned, was closed.

"But, Mr. Norris"—the girl expostulated—here she coughed, and in a manner that shook her whole frail frame, and made her eyes swim—and the words, "in all right" coming directly after the spasm, made them both laugh at their patent discordance. She was serious again in a moment. "Besides, what will you do with all this rush, and that important railroad case coming up on Wednesday?"

"Oh, we'll take care of that! Just look at you! You look more fit for a sanitarium than an office! I've decided. So please make ready."

She knew him, and knew the unconquerable determination that had carried him, a mere boy in years, up to the very top of his profession. "Very well, Mr. Norris, and thank you. I—er—thank you—any words seem so inadequate, so inexpressive, in acknowledgment of such kindness, I'm afraid—" her voice grew soft and tender—"you'll have to take my thanks for granted."

"Forget it," he said, inelegantly, and turned to get his coat.

"Ha, ha—Oh my!" He looked quickly over his shoulder at the sound of her mirth. "Gracious!" she said, half sadly, half amusedly, "we forgot the most important thing. It can't be done! How about old man Conventio's wife? Scandal, and that daughter Gossip? What will people say?"

"Oh, that's all right—don't let that concern you. Your father will be there, and I'll tell my wife tonight."

Together they left the office, climbed into his machine, picked up her father, and in less than three hours were "down in his place by the ocean."

Ethel Norris came down from her room after her husband left, and her usually gay face was grave, and her eyes red and heavy. She ate no breakfast, and the servants had to speak to her many times over before she could comprehend their meaning. She dressed for the street about noon, and without, as usual, leaving word of her intended destination, left the house. She had spent a night of very real, her spirit tortured almost beyond endurance at the thought of another coming between her and what was dearer to her than life. She would see. She would go to his office, and let her quick woman's intuition scent out the truth for her. Anything, even the ignominy of apprehending them in a compromising position, was preferable to the anguish of her present doubt-ridden imagination.

She reached his office and was about to go in when a cunning thought came to her. Why let them be aware of her presence? Why give them an opportunity to be on their guard? She turned back, her "cleverness" for the moment obscuring her, and making her fearless, clean face, ugly with the blight of subtlety. She would go to Fall's office, make some slight pretext for her visit, and watch them from there. She knocked softly, and getting no answer, pushed further open the slightly ajar door, and looked in. No one there. He must have stepped out for just a moment, or his door would be locked. So much the better. A moment would be enough, would, without her having to confess that she was watching, be worth many minutes with his attention upon her. The window was open, and she went to it, keeping always in the shadow of the wall, so's she could see without being seen. If only she could get one thorough glance before that man came back. Supposing he should come in now? What construction would he put on her strange behavior? The thought of being apprehended in that position made her eager to get it over with.

MRS. HARRY THAW WILL TAKE STAND

Mrs. Thaw, it is understood, probably will testify next week. Attorneys for the State were ready to begin their assault to-day upon the bulwark of evidence constructed by Harry K. Thaw to prove that he is sane and entitled to freedom. When the hearing before Supreme Court Justice Hendrick and a jury was concluded the State took the examination of the last of the Thaw witnesses. It was expected that these witnesses would be disposed of in time to permit the prosecution to open its case to-day with the introduction of documentary evidence.

Dr. Charles K. Mills, of the University of Pennsylvania, one of the Thaw alienists was on the stand when court adjourned yesterday afternoon. Dr. Mills and his fellow experts, Dr. Charles P. Bancroft, of New Hampshire and Dr. D. Percy Pickling of Washington, D. C., declared that Thaw was not insane. "He was never insane in his life," said Dr. Bancroft. Mills testified that he had reached his conclusion regarding Thaw after seeing the prisoner on more than twenty occasions and making a thorough physical and mental examination.

The State attorneys had their own alienists on hand to-day to combat the testimony of the Thaw medical experts and promised some startling new evidence regarding the prisoner's mental condition. Deputy Attorney General Becker submitted Dr. Mills to-day to a rigid technical examination of the manifestations of paranoia. The witness refused to modify his opinion that various acts in Thaw's life, which the State alleges were symptomatic of a paranoia were those of a sane man.
