FIRE IN STORAGE PLACE
Employees of Bowman and Company, preparing for the annual picnic which was held to-day, extinguished a small fire in the building at 334 Strawberry street used as a storage place by the Janitors of Dives, Pomeroy & Stewart, last night. Box 4 was pulled at 10.35 o'clock, but the firemen were not needed.

TURN DOWN SPEECH
Chicago, July 9.—William Jennings Bryan originally intended to address a big noonday meeting of the World's Christian Endeavor convention, but was compelled to change his plans. He sent a copy of a temperance speech with permission to have it read, but the program committee decided not to avail itself of the offer.

Came to Her Rescue

From her home in Mountain Park, Oklahoma, Mrs. O. A. Strange writes to the Plains Laboratories:

"I am taking Fruitola and Traxo for gall-stones with good results. If it had not been that it came to my rescue, I would have been dead I am sure. I cannot say too much for Fruitola and Traxo."

Fruitola possesses properties that act directly upon the intestinal parts. It is a great system cleanser, softening the congested waste and disintegrating the hardened particles that cause so much suffering, and quickly expels the accumulation to the intense relief of the patient. Traxo is a tonic alternative that acts on the liver and kidneys, stimulates the flow of gastric juices to aid digestion and removes bile from the general circulation. It serves to build up and strengthen the weakened, run-down system.

For the convenience of the public, arrangements have been made to supply Fruitola and Traxo through leading druggists. In Harrisburg they can be obtained at Gargas, the Druggist, 16 North Third street, and P. R. H. Station.

"Courage!" she said, "how dare you, sir!" smiling alluringly at him, "we'll see whether I have courage or no. Besides this doesn't take courage, it gives courage! Let us go. At once!" imperiously.

They went; and, when she rode home again in the sweet pink glow of a June evening, it was as the wife of Alfred Scott, the last of the noble old family of Scotts!

Anita's Husband Shows a Great Interest in Her Sister.

They were met at the gate by her butler.

"Miss Logan, ma'am. There's a man in the library, ma'am, who says he wants to see you. Very important business, he says. Came at 5 o'clock, and when I told him you wouldn't be back 'till late evening, he said he'd wait."

"Did he tell you his name?"

"Yes'm, Rodgers," he said. "Henry Rodgers."

"Oh, to be sure, Rodgers. He's my attorney. But what can he want?"

"He didn't say, ma'am, only important business."

When they reached the library, Henry Rodgers rose from his chair and bowed courteously.

"Good evening, Miss Logan. I shouldn't have waited for you coming so persistently, only in going over your father's will again today I happened on a clause which, I'm sorry to say, has hitherto escaped my attention."

"What is it?" she asked nervously. "Why it's in the nature of a restrictive clause, Miss Logan. It provided that if either you or your sister marry before reaching the age of 25, you forfeit your share of the fortune. It was most careless of me to have overlooked it before, but it was tucked away among a host of details of management, and so forth, it entirely eluded me. I felt it to be most important, so I took the liberty of waiting for you here."

Anita was stunned at this startling disclosure, and for a moment was speechless. Then she turned quickly, confidently to her husband, and found his eyes intent upon her. His face had gone suddenly pale, his eyebrows were contracted in fear, and his lips pressed into a tight line of mute warning for her to be silent, as his head shook ever so little—just suggestively—from side to side.

She understood quickly the meaning of his mute message, and recovering, turned again to her attorney.

"Very well, Mr. Rodgers, but we should have known this before. You will wire immediately to my sister, please."

"I am truly sorry, Miss, and I shall wire immediately."

He bowed, walked toward the door, they following. Scott bent low and whispered into Anita's ear, "We must keep quiet, Ann—for your sake."

She smiled up at him radiantly, and catching hold of his arm pressed it impulsively, a token of her appreciation for his infinite consideration.

The next morning Ann received a telegram from her sister Bess in the East. "Ordered to the rest in mountains. Too much study. Will be home in a day." Bess came, and the sisters went at once to the mountains, Scott agreeing to meet them there later.

VI.
Scott arrived late the night of the same day. The next morning he proposed a walk over the mountainside, and was eagerly seconded by Ann, Bess, however, wearied and sore with the previous day's ride, announced that she was all "in," and would await their return at the hotel. Ann noted with keen displeasure Scott's disappointment at Bess' announcement, and was further vexed when he proposed that they stay and keep Bess company.

Bess wouldn't hear of their staying behind, so they started for their stroll together, Alfred disappointed at Bess' absence, and Ann anxious and trying mentally to laugh away the fears that played shadow-like but persistent in her mind. They took a narrow footpath that wound its way around the mountainside, hugging tightly the wall to their left, for in some places on their right the path stopped abruptly and the cliff side fell sheer away into sickening space.

He took the lead, keeping about two feet in advance of her, and walking quickly, his feet unconsciously keeping pace with his thoughts. He thought of Bess, as she had looked that morning at breakfast, her liquid eyes, chestnut curly hair, and slim curved shoulders, making her look, he thought, more like a wood-nymph than a human. He thought how fine it would be could she be there, just in the path ahead of him. How well she would fit into the picture of rugged mountains, framed by a sweep of glorious blue sky.

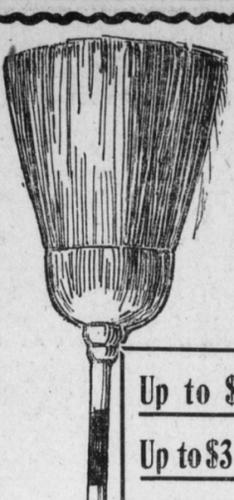

Anita had come up close behind him, panting, but supple and eager, her fine young frame moving in quick graceful strides along the trail. Suddenly he was aware of the sound of loosening pebbles, rolling down the cliff behind him—heard her startled cry as she lost her footing—felt her tense, desperate grip on his arm as she lost her footing.

Turning half way around, he saw that she was hanging half over the cliffside, her face pale and horror-stricken, her only hope for life, outside of a miracle—centering itself in her grip on his arm. He saw at a glance the almost sheer declivity of the mountain side, and a sickening lead overcame him.

DR. DIXON SPEAKS OUT TO MOTHERS

Says There Is No Excuse For Allowing Children to Be Infected From Floors

State Commissioner of Health Samuel G. Dixon, in a warning to mothers about the care of infants, says that it is all nonsense to believe anything like the old saw that everyone must eat a peck of dirt. He warns that children should be kept from getting contaminated with what may be on floors during the crawling age.

The commissioner says: It is natural for a baby to crawl and during the first few years of life most children spend much time playing on the floor. In order that this natural disposition to keep near mother earth shall not prove injurious there are a few precautions which it is well to take.

For babies it is easy enough to spread a blanket or some similar protection on the floor and when they grow older a little railing some six feet square will serve to keep them within bounds until such a time as they can be taught not to pick things off the floor and put them in their mouths.

Carpets, rugs, and wooden floors are invariably contaminated by the dirt which is tracked in from the street. There are innumerable colonies of germs everywhere on the floors, some of these are almost certain to be disease germs. When children grow old enough to be given things to eat, unless they are watched they will not hesitate to pick up the food which has fallen on the floor or which they have laid there. This practice is genuinely risky and every effort should be made as early as possible to train the children that things which have fallen on the floor are dirty and must not be put in their mouths. It is surprising how early they will learn this if care is taken and a fresh supply of the precious titbit offered in the place of the soiled one.

The wise mother makes every effort to protect her children's food from contamination for many of the digestive disturbances which are so fatal in the early years of childhood may be traced to dirty food.

The old saying that we must all eat our peck of dirt is a stupid and harmful one like many another of the old saws.
