Women AND THEIR INTERESTS

"Their Married Life"

Copyright by International News Service.

With a feeling of vague resentment Helen followed Nora into the kitchen. "But, Nora," she protested, "I don't see why you are thinking of leaving now."

Nora was silent, and from the set of her mouth Helen saw that she was stubborn. Nora had informed Helen that morning that she was going to be married. Helen had always known that the blow would fall sometime, but the idea had been softened by the belief that when Nora left her younger sister Maggie would be installed in her place.

The war, however, had made this possibility out of the question and Helen was completely taken by surprise when Nora had calmly mentioned that she and Joe had decided to marry.

Helen hardly knew what to say. There were a hundred thoughts running through her head and she did not know which to follow. "Without Nora, on whom she had come to rely for everything? Of course if she complained to Warren he would be sure to say that the household affairs were not his business and he had enough to do to keep the office running smoothly."

"When are you thinking of leaving Nora," she said as calmly and with as dignified a manner as she could muster. She felt any minute as though she would dissolve into tears.

"Not before I try to get you a girl, Mrs. Curtis," she answered, resolved to be magnanimous as long as Helen treated her with consideration.

"You will try to get me a good one, won't you?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Nora, "as good a one as there is to get."

"And when do you think you will leave?"

"Joe and I want to get married the middle of July, ma'am."

"In two weeks?" said Helen despairingly.

"Yes, Mrs. Curtis." And then, with a grin and hiding her face in the towel, "He's tired to death waiting already."

Helen could not help smiling at this bit of information.

Helen Promises a Wedding Present. "Walk of course," she said, with more poise, "I know you would not leave me in the lurch, and I have something very pretty that I am going to give you and Joe to help furnish your house."

Nora exclaimed delightedly and Helen was much relieved to think that after all she would not be bothered looking for a girl. At least she could thank her stars for that fact. If it were impossible to get Maggie, at least she would have some one Nora would recommend.

Helen wandered back into her room. Just the same, it wasn't good to be an easy thing to break in a new girl. She wondered if it would be possible to trust her in the house while Warren took his vacation. If not, their summer would be spoiled.

Besides, Warren, was so easily impatient if she were not ready to greet him when he arrived home every night, and teaching a new girl to prepare food as they liked it would be anything but conducive to a cool appearance and an unruffled temper.

Helen sat down before her desk drawer and began to straighten it out. She kept a variety of things in it and it finally began to interest her as she came across a few trifles she had lost track of.

Suddenly she jumped up as though she had received a shock, in her fingers, held gingerly enough, was a pin. Like a flash came up the remembrance of the lost veil pin and Mrs. Thurston's accusation. She had never remembered the unpleasantness of the thing without burning cheeks and an uncomfortable feeling.

Helen Does Not Know What to Think. Mrs. Thurston had been very unreasonable and rude about the matter and Warren had managed it for her so that she was convinced that she was right and Mrs. Thurston had been in the wrong.

She had not seen Mrs. Thurston since and had no desire to. Of late they had suffered reverses and the Thurstons had moved out of the neighborhood. Helen had no idea where they lived, but certainly the pin would have to be returned. What a strange thing it was. She had been so positive that she had not kept the pin, in fact she had no recollection where she had lost it.

She knew that the drawer had been neglected for a long time, and that she had thought several times in the last year that she must get to work and clean it out, but always something else had taken her time and the necessary cleaning had been postponed.

"Nora," she said, going out into the kitchen with the pin in her hand, "have you ever seen this pin before? Do you know how it came to be in the desk drawer?"

"Yes, Mrs. Curtis," said Nora readily enough. "I found it when I was cleaning your room—one day and I slipped it into the desk drawer. I forgot to tell you, ma'am."

"How long ago?" questioned Helen.

"A long time ago," said Nora, blushing and shifting her gaze uneasily.

Helen knew that there was no use of questioning the girl merely, nor of reproving her. The thing was done and that was all there was to it. Nora would remember better if Helen said nothing at all than she would if Helen scolded. Helen decided that the easiest way out was to send the pin to Mrs. Thurston with a note of explanation, which she could do as she liked about believing. Then the idea occurred to her that she would have to find out where the Thurstons lived first. She would let the matter rest till Warren came home and then she could perhaps ask him without telling him why she wanted to know. At least she had a respite of a few hours. What a pity the thing had to turn up anyway.

Another installment of this interesting series will appear here soon.

A SMART AND CONVERTIBLE SKIRT

One Model that can be Made a Skirt or a Tunic at Will.

By MAY MANTON

8632 Skirt with Plaits at Sides, 24 to 32 waist.

Skirts that have plaits at the sides while they are plain at the back and at the front, are among the newest and the best liked. Here is one that is made in just that way and which also has one very great and unusual advantage. It can be used as a skirt and it can be cut off to become a tunic, so that it serves two distinctly different purposes. When cut as a tunic, it is shaped to form a point at the front and one at the back and such shapings are exceedingly smart. The skirt is made in two pieces and is semi-circular, it takes a most graceful folds and ripples. It is equally good for all uses; as a tunic, it will be found charming for the indoor costume, whether for daytime or evening wear and also for the street suit.

For the medium size will be required 5 1/2 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 4 yds. 3/4 yds. 44.

The pattern 8632 is cut in sizes from 24 to 32 inches waist measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

"The phone won't work," he announced, slowly putting the receiver back in place.

Pat Grady did not answer. For just a moment the two men stared at one another. Then Grady quietly put his shoulder against a big cupboard at one side of the room and he pulled it before the window, so that just a mere slant of light showed through.

"Bolt the door double, boss," he said softly. "The devil's in those men at the beat. But he's got so much room to locate in their stomachs this day, I'm thinking we'll have a bit of a scrimmage."

Monroe stared at him irresolutely a second, then moved decisively to the door. Outside the men waited eagerly, their brows still lowering, their faces dark and sinisterly expectant.

"Men," cried the oil king, a slight tremor in his voice despite the effort made at control, "I've just tried the phone and it's out of order."

A hoarse laugh that had nothing of mirth in it halted him. Then he leaped back into the office, hurriedly tossing the bolts into place, as the laugh grew into a roar, a roar of such menace as even he had never heard before. A roar and then a wild, insane rush forward.

He had seen the opportunity for revenge when, peering furtively through the mess hall window he saw there was no chance for the promised supper. And then he saw the door was completely master the situation, domineer these men despite the fact that the promise was broken.

Quick thinking had it been that led him to the phone, he was thinking spired within his cunning brain by the master of evil himself. And now he would go back and complete the work. As he rushed toward the group about the office door he caught the laugh that greeted Monroe's announcement of his inability to get Los Angeles on the wire.

He knew that the laugh might be turned in either direction. He took it up instantly, a wild yell of hatred and defiance bursting from his throat. He grinned to himself as he saw the light that yell up and lunged toward the man who seemed mocking them.

Then he whirled back, staggering slightly, but quickly righting himself from the blow that had been dealt him round lightly. He pressed his hands to the place where the blow had fallen, staring at them in astonishment as they came away, a red sticky smear upon them.

And then the rage that he had so cunningly controlled leaped up and overtook him. He had been shot by the same man who had knocked him down, and then discharged him from the place without even giving him opportunity to get his pay check. And for what? Because he refused longer to tolerate the vile food that was served him. He had worked a gun and was entitled to good food. And because he had demanded it, he was shamefully abused and knocked down and robbed and then shot.

With little whimpers of anger shrilling from his brawny throat, more like an animal of the African jungle than human, being was as he gathered the men together behind the mess hall, planning with them how to capture the office and take revenge upon the pair within.

Two men and a "gun boy" he declared shrilly. "Let 'em use up that bunch of cartridges and they won't amount to two whoops. Draw the fire while I'm off."

He did not finish, turning and ducking the leaden messenger which was sent from the office toward him. In a few moments he reappeared with a rifle, waving it triumphantly above his head, exultantly shrilling a defiance toward the two in command.

In command no longer. For two men and a gun had been offset by this crowd and a rifle.

Quickly Brown Joe made out from where the fire came, carefully plugging away at the aperture, disturbing and at the same time drawing the fire of Grady. And always did his lips move in careful count, a slow smile storing his face evilly as he realized the supply of bullets must be getting low.

There's a big timber round the other side the shack, he suggested. "His fire is getting weak now. Get that timber and make a rush at the door. I'll keep his aim wild with the rifle."

Without a hint of disobedience they fell into the suggestion. Mob-like they had been led into the affair and now all the wild, unthinking, ungovernable impulse of mob spirit was upon them.

Swiftly Grady discharged his revolver in their midst. One man fell and they stared at him wonderingly, brutishly pained that such a thing should happen. Brown Joe saw the danger and let out a wild whoop of exultation.

"I got him—winged him—"

"You're a dirty, brown liar," thundered back Grady from the cabin.

But his retort was drowned by the cheer from the mob, as they picked up the log again and lunged toward the office door. Another man staggered, wavered a second, then fell face foremost upon the ground. They did not heed him. Toward the door they dashed with their battering ram.

WHAT IS URIC ACID?

Does Uric Acid Cause Backache, Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble?

Dear Dr. Pierce:—What is Uric Acid? Does it cause kidney trouble? Not long ago I was examined for insurance and an analysis of the kidney secretions showed an excess of Uric Acid.

I suffer from backache, and rheumatism in my limbs, but never before suspected my kidneys, recognize you as an authority on these subjects, and wish you would give me this information.

LEWIS R. My Dear Sir: Answering your letter, Uric Acid indicates poisoning of the system; it is also associated with several other poisons and forms of painful irritants in the cells of the joints, nerves and muscles. Everyone has Uric Acid in the system, but naturally in small quantities. Excessive amount is caused by eating too much meat and foods that ferment in the stomach. The kidneys being the filters of the blood are supposed to separate and throw the poisons out of the system. Weak, tired and overworked kidneys fail to do this, hence the poisonous Uric Acid and its associated poisons contaminate the blood, causing backache, tired, rheumatism, dropsy and liver, worn-out feeling, short breath and many other symptoms. To overcome the trouble is only a matter of toning up the kidneys, and this is best done by a treatment with "An-Uric" with proper diet and exercise. This prescription has been thoroughly tested and used by specialists at my institution in Buffalo, N. Y., with satisfactory results, and astonishing relief, it being 37 times more active than lithia in dissolving uric acid.

I recently put "An-Uric" before the eyes of a man, and it may now be obtained from almost any one of the leading druggists in town, simply by asking for Doctor Pierce's "An-Uric" in tablet form.

If run-down, weak or emaciated, need building up and wish to put on enough "stay there" flesh to round off your figure, making it plump, robust and healthy looking, I would suggest also a tonic for strengthening the stomach, giving life to the lungs and purity to the blood, such as does Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the herbal system tonic. Take good medical advice, and do not let deadly Bright's Disease or Diabetes develop from neglected kidneys. (Signed) V. M. PIERCE, M. D.
