GANNETT LEAVES THE STATE SERVICE

Chief Engineer of the Water Supply Commission to Engage in Private Work

Farley Gannett, who has been engineer of the Water Supply Commission of Pennsylvania for nearly ten years, has resigned to enter private practice of engineering in Harrisburg. In his letter of resignation Mr. Gannett states that he has desired to take this step for some years in order to take up numerous projects which have been brought to his attention, but had retained his connection with the commission at the request of the chairman, John Birkinbine, to complete important investigations and reports, which have now been finished.

Under Mr. Gannett the engineering force of the commission has increased from two to fifty men and the reports have grown from paper-covered pamphlets to volumes containing 800 to 1,000 pages, which are recognized all over the United States as standard for hydrographic reports. It is conceded that Pennsylvania's laws for the supervision of streams excel those of any other eastern state and that they have set an example which has been followed by many. The supervision over the safety of dams is thorough and complete and over 400 dams have been examined in the last two years by the engineers of the commission and several scores of them have been strengthened as a result. Since 1913 no bridge or encroachment of any kind has been built over or in a stream in the state unless the engineers of the commission have shown it not to be injurious or have had the plans modified so as to make it harmless in time of flood. The system of measuring the flow of streams, instituted by Mr. Gannett in 1907, is the most extensive of any state and its results are used and quoted by all engineers.

One division of the commission's force of engineers has recently completed a 1,500-page report, showing the location, name and use of every stream in the state. Every one of the 800 water supply systems was visited and described, as well as all the water power plants. Navigation, floods, culm, rainfall and other subjects relating to the streams are treated in a comprehensive manner, with maps, diagrams and photographs.

Mr. Gannett, who is the son of the late Henry Gannett, president of the National Geographic Society of Washington, D. C., came to Harrisburg in 1902 after graduating from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Boston to work under James H. Fuyes for the Board of Public Works. He helped design and build the Paxton creek interceptor, made the first survey for the Wildwood state reservation and park and was assistant engineer during the designing and construction of the filter plant. In 1905 he was invited by their interests in the State to apply for the position of engineer to the commission and was appointed December 1, 1905.

Mr. Gannett, who is president of the Engineers' Society of Pennsylvania, has always been interested in the welfare of engineers and has done much to advance their interests in the State. He has written many papers for engineering journals and addressed engineering societies and technical schools concerning hydraulic subjects and has been called upon by the federal government for expert testimony. Mr. Gannett will associate himself with several well-known engineers and will specialize in practice before the various state departments, representing corporations and municipalities. He has established, in connection with a chemist and bacteriologist, a laboratory for the analysis of water and sewage, testing filter plant operations, etc.

Opening of Bids on 16
 New Submarines Delayed

Special to The Telegraph
 Washington, D. C., July 16.—Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, announced yesterday he had postponed the opening of bids on 16 new submarines authorized by the last Congress until September 23 next, to permit the New York Shipbuilding Company, of Camden, and the Newport News Shipbuilding Company to enter the bidding.

Samuel M. Knox, of the New York Shipbuilding Company, earlier in the week informed Secretary Daniels his company would be in a position to construct the most modern and efficient types of undersea boats within a few months, and that they would enter the field if the bids were postponed.

It is, however, understood that the New York Shipbuilding Company is prepared to build submarines of the type now being used by Germany and which have proved so successful offensively, against merchant ships and war vessels.
