Edith felt that there was a time coming, and that shortly, in which she and her mother would have to have an understanding, and she was secretly glad that it was not just yet, as she felt that her sense of obligation might cause her to see seriously, that side of the question she knew least interested her.

"What's his name?" she said at length.

"Richard Walker—bachelor"—meaningly. "And elected to the Sunset Club. We should have an opportunity to meet him shortly. You know, dear—it's time we met someone. The place is becoming absolutely impossible."

"Oh, I find the society quite congenial."

"Congenial! It's easy for a beautiful girl to find society congenial; leave that to the plain ill-bred ones. Congeniality is what they strive for, because they realize there's nothing better possible for them. Congenial! As though finding society congenial were the end-all of a beautiful, cultured girl's life. Being congenial won't help you any, when you see the wrinkles coming. Congenial, O, indeed!"

"You speak of people in this place as though they were inconsiderable. I'm afraid—"

"So they are inconsiderable," she said, "rising young men, promising young men, young men of intelligence—in fact—all young men, but young men without money. There's no sense in our trying to evade what's in each of our minds. When you say, 'it's congenial here—you mean Hugh Keene,' and when I say, 'considerable people and young men of every kind but young men with money,' I mean Hugh Keene."

"She rose to go indoors."

"That's that! All nonsense. One can't live on promises or inconsiderable intelligence. You really should appreciate that. I'll do my best to meet this Mr. Walker; we can arrange it at the club—and you—" her shoulders shrugged expressively. Then suddenly her hard face softened (Edith thought it looked much nicer inflexible), she came quickly toward her daughter.

"It's been an awful drag, dear—more of a drag than you, at this time can appreciate. It's because I don't want that you should ever have to appreciate what denial means that I'm so anxious you should be comfortable. Anything but a lack of money. That is doubly unbearable for those who are used to luxury. Think of that—try to imagine yourself without the luxuries you have come to consider the necessities of life, and you might get an inkling of what I mean." She turned and went into the house.

Edith felt there for quite awhile, her first feeling of discomfort for her mother's obvious inference with regard to Walker, changing as the old lady's words jolted her suddenly out of the towering castles of her imagination. She seemed to realize suddenly the recognition due the percentage of truth in her mother's words. Ideals and luxurious surroundings were, to be sure, desirable in preference to all other things. But ideals without luxurious surroundings? Love, so to speak, in a cottage—for one used to a mansion? Which could she best afford to do without—her physical comfort, or her ideals?

She pondered, and it was a bad sign for the ideals, that she pondered long.

III.

Edith was splendidly vibrantly alive as she mixed with the many people in the reception room of the exclusive Sunset Club the night of the annual ball. She wore a wonderful filmy cream colored gown that artistically subordinated itself to the soft beauty of her face.

Mrs. Hilton was there, seeing all, understanding all, her deep piercing eyes darting everlastingly about the busy room, ready at any moment to appreciate anything that happened anywhere—in visual touch every second with the entire room. Both Edith and her mother were the guests of Hugh Keene.

In one corner of the room, surrounded by a group of worshippers of the shrine of gold, stood Walker.

When Hugh led Edith back after the first dance, Mrs. Hilton spoke to him, drawing him slightly out of the range of passing guests.

"That man over in the corner, the one in the center of that group, dark-haired, rather coarse featured, he's Mr. Walker, I believe?"

"Can you arrange so's we'll meet him?"

"Certainly, if you care—I'll bring him over."

"Of course you won't say—"

"Nonsense, he'll come to meet you!"

He started for the far corner of the room and in a few moments returned, Walker in tow.

Introductions were soon over. Walker bowed deferentially to Agnes gallantly to Beauty, and all stood talking until Mrs. Hilton graciously indicated that Hugh offer her his arm. He did, rather reluctantly, and they moved off, leaving Edith and Walker alone.

Hugh was worried at the evident attraction that Walker and Edith seemed to have for each other; so worried that he proposed to her during the very next dance—proposed and was put off with—

"This is so sudden, Hugh. I hardly know my own mind."

The worry did not leave him the next day, did not even leave him that afternoon when Walker called on him and gave him a stock buying commission, and showed his confidence by leaving with him a certified check for $250,000, though the prospect of the commissions on the trading did open up possibilities.

Guard Your Baby Against Summer Complaint

It's hard enough to guard your baby from the ills you don't know. Don't place him in the way of troubles you know.

It is summer complaint that snaps up the lives of our babies in summer. There'll be no summer complaint for your baby—no thin, weary body if you make sure his food is exactly right. Nurse your baby if you possibly can—if not, give him something so near the little stomach won't feel the difference. Give him Nestlé's Food

With the growth of the Better Babies Movement grows the use of NESTLÉ'S Food. Where one mother used it seven years ago—five use it today. Cow's milk from unclean dairies and sick cows carries summer complaint. If you could examine the cow and milk it yourself—if you could modify it so your baby could digest it—cow's milk would be all right. You can't. But NESTLÉ'S has found the way to bring to your baby the full benefit of cow's milk without any of the harm. NESTLÉ'S is pure, rich milk from healthy cows, milked in clean dairies, and modified so that the weakest baby can digest it. The tough curd is made soft as in mother's milk, and the special things your baby needs to build a healthy body are added. Just add cold water and boil, and it is ready. Send the coupon for a big can of Nestlé's enough for 12 feedings and for the book on "Better Babies" free.

Scales On Scalp. Itched and Burned. Hair Harsh and Dry. In Two Weeks

HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

"My daughter's scalp had been covered with a yellow scurf ever since she was a baby. There were scales on her scalp and her hair came out in bunches. It always seemed harsh and dry, and never would grow to do any good and it was terribly broken off. Her scalp itched and burned a great deal."

"I saw a Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertisement and I got some. I used them about two weeks and her scalp is just as white as anybody's and her hair is better." (Signed) Mrs. Daisy D. Martin, R. D. No. 6, Washington, Pa., March 2, 1915.
