Undercutting a Nation's Religious Conceptions

The Portentious Literary Project of Young Men's Christian Association Men in India; Great Savants Co-operating (By the Religious Rambler)

WHILE there are great and new movements in religion afoot in America, there is even more notable work to be reported from Asia, where Christianity displays an aggressiveness and certain qualities of statesmanship that can scarcely be matched here in America. The very vigness of the work confronting Christian leadership in the Orient seems to call for unusual qualities of leadership.

The sort of thing the ancient church councils used to do is reported from India, where, at the stimulus of certain Y. M. C. A. men, a deliberate, organized, scientific effort is under way to undercut the non-Christian faiths and to commend Christianity to the people. While it supplements, it is also the antithesis of the individualistic work of the ordinary missionary. The aim of the present effort is to turn the mass of the people toward the faith of the West.

The new movement, while it expresses the mind and has the sympathy of all the missionary bodies in India, owes its leadership to the sagacity of the Y. M. C. A., which some time ago set apart J. N. Farquhar, a scholarly man, as literary secretary. Mr. Farquhar spends his summers in Oxford University, teaching Sanscrit, and his winters in India, securing writers and planning literature. Now, in addition to the strictly Christian and devotional literature being issued, he has put under way the first comprehensive scheme for the popular presentation of Indian life and literature ever devised.

The simple fact that, whereas the leaders of Indian life have failed to produce popular literature concerning their own national ideals and religion, the Christians are doing so, will do much to commend the new enterprise to the people. The three series of books comprise "The Religious Quest of India," "The Indian Religious Life," and "The Heritage of India."

Mr. Farquhar himself tells the story straight forwardly, the magnitude of the scheme appearing between the lines: "Altogether a band of thirty-five authors, consisting of thirty-two of the most prominent men, both Indian and European, in missionary circles in India, three of the greatest English orientalist, and the leading art professor in India, are working together. Some sixty volumes of Sanscrit literature have been planned and forty of them are now being written. There are three distinct series of books, all meant to offer a scholarly and sympathetic interpretation of Indian civilization and religion.

"The Religious Quest of India" series will deal with the leading aspects of Hinduism, Buddhism, Jainism and Islam in India. In each case a careful comparison with Christianity forms a prominent part of the volume. One is now in print, "Iran, Paganism," by Dr. N. Macnicol, of Poona. "The Indian Religious Life" series, which may run to twenty volumes, deals with the sects of India. They will be published by the Association Press in India at a low figure, in paper. The first is by the bishop of Madras and deals with the village deities of
