WHO PAYS?

The Fruit of Folly

Copyright, 1915, by Pathe Exchange, Inc. All movie rights reserved.

Clay scowled at his pretty wife. He was in no mood for trifling. He was too wretched to note the paleness of her cheeks or that she had donned her prettiest manner along with her frillest morning gown.

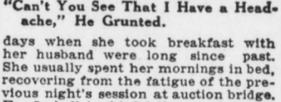

"Can't you see that I have a headache?" he grumbled.

"Oh these mornings after," she answered teasingly as she slowly approached and planted a light, quick kiss on his nearer cheek.

"Is his morning to grant his little wife one tiny favor?"

"Yes his mightiness is," he answered ungraciously and Isabelle sagely with the wisdom that the best of women's intuition, decided to await a more favorable opportunity to press her request.

Clay was too absorbed in his own troubles; to much engrossed with his aching head to think clearly or he would have realized that Isabelle's "tiny favor" must have been an important one. No trivial matter would cause her to arise at that hour. The

"Can't You See That I Have a Headache," He Grumbled.

Clay had frequently objected to his wife's visits to the Widow Blake's apartments. He had objected at first because he did not like some of the people she had met there and later he had objected to the financial drain because of the financial drain that Isabelle's losses had imposed on the family exchequer.

Stories had come to Clay, stories of wild times at the Widow Blake's. Stories had come to him, too, of the fascinating widow's wild infatuation for Horace Stone, attorney and sharper, when during his dealings were often open to suspicion and whose escapades in which automobiles, chorus girls, wine suppers, stage doors, and midnight revels were largely interspersed made the chief topics of conversation among the men about town.

Careful investigation, however, had failed to reveal anything remarkable in Stone's conduct while the play was on at Cora Blake's beautiful home. It is true that the widow confessed to 50 years of age. It is true that Stone was 20 years her junior but she gradually, through a mental process that he could hardly analyze, came to regard this as a matter entirely between the two of them. Stone, she had once said to herself with a shrug, "If Stone wants to woo a woman old enough to be his mother, that's his business. And if Cora Blake wants to be fooled by a man young enough to be her son, why that's hers."

And so gradually his objections to Isabelle's auction games had grown less and less—had grown less probably not so much because he approved of them but because they provided occupation for her when she indulged his favorite folly—his nightly time with the boys.

As may have been guessed before this, Isabelle's early rising on this fateful Saturday morning had to do with the play at Mrs. Blake's. Luck had been against her once more. The Fickle Goddess had deserted her almost entirely and when the play on Friday night was over she shuddered at the staggering amount of her losses.

She had reached the end of her resources. Her allowance for the next three months was gone. All that remained to her was the diamond engagement ring that Edgar had given her on the Saturday evening when she had blushing promised to take him "for better or for worse." Many times she asked herself that question as she lay there alone in the long night, staring with wide open, but sightless eyes into the wall of darkness that seemed to shut her in—a wall that had no opening to the right or to the left—above or below.

Morning came at last. And with it a slow awakening to the broad light of day and a full realization that she had a problem to face.

Cowardice was not one of Isabelle's follies. "The sooner the better," she had murmured to herself, and after a careful toilet had gone resolutely to her husband's dressing room, there to put the whole sordid story before him, and ask for help once more. Well she knew that he would storm. Well she knew that the only times he objected to Mrs. Blake's now, was when she had to come to him for money to recoup her losses. But there was no help for it. He was her only hope.

But she had reckoned without the wet towel and the headache and the morning after grouch. And so as we have seen, her mission had ended in failure.

A dejected little figure she sat in her husband's dressing room, keeping up her pretense of gaiety, only when Clay happened to raise his eyes toward her—which was not often—she "A telephone for you sir," said the butler, creating a welcome diversion, as he handed Clay the extension instrument.

"Hello—yes, this is Clay. Oh, hello, Irwin. What's that you say? All right, I'll be right down."

His wife saw the look of anguish and despair that came into his face, so he hastily slammed up the receiver, finished his dressing and rushed from the house without giving her any explanation.

CHAPTER TWO.

Russell Irwin was early at the office that Saturday morning. Things were in the real estate business and it was only by being on the job early and late that he managed to keep things going—managed to hold the firm of Irwin & Clay on top of the turbulent waters of failure that threatened to engulf them at any moment.

THE PERSISTENT TUNIC

A New Skirt Showing That Features in its Latest Development.

By MAY MANTON

8704 Tunic Skirt, 24 to 32 waist.

The tunic continues to be a favorite in spite of all the other designs shown and here it is given a new and interesting form. It flares gracefully and becomingly and is worn over a skirt narrow enough for contrast, yet wide enough for fashion. The lower edge of the tunic can be finished with scallops or it can be left straight. It is one of the prettiest and most attractive garments that ever was worn and because of its inherent charm, it is a favorite. Here, it is made of taffeta over lace, but the model is a good one for any material that is soft enough to be gathered successfully. It would be very charming made of cotton crepe or of cotton voile over taffeta and it would be pretty in a colored voile or colored crepe over the same material in white. In the back view, the flounce on the under-skirt is plaited and there, the material is chiffon, while the tunic is of faille silk.

For the medium size will be required 2 1/2 yds. of material 36 in. wide, for the foundation, 4 yds. of lace 14 in. wide for gathered flounce, 2 1/2 yds. of material 44 for the plaited flounce, 3 3/4 yds. 27 or 36, 2 1/2 yds. 44, for the tunic.

The pattern No. 8704 is cut in sizes from 24 to 32 in. waist measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

Roosevelt Will Support Governor Johnson in 1916

Special to The Telegraph

New York, Aug. 3.—Hiram Johnson, Governor of California and nominee of the Progressive party for Vice-President in 1912 when Colonel Roosevelt headed the ticket, will be used as the battering ram with which to break down the doors of conservatism and force progressive principles and a nominee satisfactory to the members of the Progressive party on the Republican national convention in 1916.

That at least is the present plan, and it will be carried out unless development prior to the primary elections next Spring make the adoption of a new program necessary. Colonel Roosevelt, who returned to his home at Oyster Bay to-day after a visit to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, talked over the political situation at length with General C. G. Arnold, and it can be stated authoritatively that Johnson is not only willing, but eager, to make the fight.

Mutuals Elect Officers; President Brown Speaks

The annual meeting of the Assembly No. 4, Mutual Beneficial Association of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was held last Saturday night at Chestnut Street. An attendance of 500 members, and seventy-five new members were admitted.

Addresses were made by George W. Brown, of Philadelphia, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Robert C. Britton, a member of the Board of Directors. The members were requested to designate their homes on August 23 in honor of the veteran employees who will hold a reunion in Harrisburg on that date. These officers were elected: President, E. K. Smith; vice-president, J. T. Gruber; secretary, C. H. Black; treasurer, J. M. Reed; financial secretary, C. A. Runk; inside secretary, L. S. Howard; outside secretary, C. N. Zeigler; general adjustment committee, J. E. Murray; delegates to the General Assembly, J. Koons, W. H. McDevitt, W. J. Dice, E. F. Reed, H. A. Bixler, W. H. Runk; alternate delegates to the General Assembly, J. M. Fleming, J. W. Zeller, R. Monegan, C. L. Dice, J. E. Blosser and J. J. Ferris.

Girls May Wear 1-Piece Bathing Suits For All Police Captain Cares

Someone started a report yesterday that Captain Thompson had issued an order permitting bloomer bathing suits without skirts.

The Captain said to-day: "I issued no order. It matters little to me what is worn as long as it is a bathing suit. At many resorts they are wearing one-piece bathing suits. Divers giving exhibitions in local theaters wear them. I guess there would be no prolonged kicking if Harrisburg bathers wore up-to-date costumes."

Provisions Are Again Entering Mexico City

By Associated Press

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—Telegraph communication between Vera Cruz and Mexico City has been restored. Provisions began entering the city yesterday and other train loads are en route.

Reports from Vera Cruz say that in a battle between Zapata and Carranza troops in the streets of Paso Del Macho on the night of July 26 the Carranza troops were forced to retreat. In another battle on July 29 on the outskirts of Cordoba, Carranza losses were small.

Women and Their Interests

Importance of 'Don't' and 'Must' in Child Culture, Shown by Dorothy Dix

BY DOROTHY DIX

The latest exponent of the new high-pressure, rapid-action method of child culture, which is geared up to such speed that it entirely eliminates babyhood and childhood and in twelve short years turns a mewling infant into a human encyclopedia, has propounded ten commandments for mothers. Two of these are: "Thou shalt not say 'Don't' unto thy child." "Remember never to say 'Thou must.'"

Probably the lady's recipe for raising up young pedants is correct. Probably, if you start with a babe in the cradle and devote your time to stuffing it full of polysyllables and facts, it will be full to bursting of polysyllables and facts at a time when other children are still lisping and looking for the man in the moon, instead of discoursing about the probabilities of there being canals on Mars.

Personally I am an unregenerate cave woman when it comes to babies. I adore them when they are pink and soft and cuddly, and I think a five-year-old who hasn't got a single piece of information concealed about his person is the most entertaining human being on earth, and if I had a baby that I couldn't rock to sleep, or who didn't believe in Santa Claus, or who didn't talk baby talk, I should feel that I had been cheated out of the very best thing that life can give to a woman.

Many Marvellously Precocious Children Become Dull Men and Women

None of your little Solomons in the cradle for mine. And I should have clear conscience about putting my baby to be a baby, and my child be a little unlit child through all that beautiful dawn of life, because I was brought up on a racehorse farm, and I know what happens to the two-year-olds that are raced too early. Also I have seen so many marvellously precocious children who turned into commonplace dull men and women.

However, these be heterodox views, and I am not going to argue them with any expert child culturist, but what I do want to call attention to are these two commandments to mothers: "Thou shalt not say 'don't' unto thy child." "Remember never to say 'thou must.'"

Not say "don't" to a child. Not say "thou must" to a child, when one-half of life is "don't" to us, and the other half is "thou must" to us. Why? That's the trouble with the world-to-day. Men and women have not had it ground into their consciousness since their earliest childhood that their inclinations and desires must not govern their actions, and that there are certain things that they must not do, and other things that they must do simply because one is right and the other is wrong.

There is not a man in the penitentiary, there is not a girl in the street, who are not there because their mothers failed to say to them often enough and impressively enough: "Don't do that" and you "Must do this other." It is the mothers who have said "don't" and "must" to their children, and enforced them with a strong hand, who have raised up the men and women who have done the big things in the world, and who keep law and order in it.

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL

ALWAYS FRESH PURE-SWEET-WHOLE SOME

Who are the men who are failures in the world, the men who fit from occupation to occupation, and office to office, because when the thing they have undertaken to do loses its novelty, and settles down to the hard, steady pull of everyday toil, they have not the grit and endurance to go on with it? It is those men who have never been taught in their childhood the "musts" of life.

Who are the women who go running home to mother and the dinner table?
