TORIC Always Painstaking

A minute defect in the lens that forms part of the eye will prevent certain rays of light from focusing correctly on the retina of the eye. This means imperfect vision.

By his examination the optometrist finds this defect and works out a formula by which a glass lens may be ground to counteract it. That has been my life study.

FROM NEWSBOY TO HIS OWN LAW OFFICE

That's the Story of Sam Levine, Former "King of the Harrisburg Newsies"

SAM LEVINE

From newsboy to his own law office—that is the story of Sam Levine. Nearly everybody in town knows Sam, for he sold papers in the street for many a day and sold them when nobody else could. After his ability to sell himself was conclusively proved, Sam was put in charge of all the newsboys at the city's dailies and he made good at that difficult job with a vengeance.

After graduating from the Tech High School—O, yes, he went to school along with his work which got him up early and kept him up late—Sam went to the University of Pennsylvania. From that institution he went to Dickinson and he now has his law degree from that school. This fall he will open law offices at Richmond, Va. He is spending the summer at Petersburg. Sam is the son of Max Levine, a well-known Every penny Sam spent on his education he earned through the sale of newspapers.

LABOR FAMINE IS NOT FEARED HERE

sitate more men. Railroad building would cause a demand for laborers, but there is no likelihood of anything in this line just now. In the freight department, where there has been a prolonged dull season, men are plentiful."

Charles H. Amdrus, master mechanic for the Philadelphia division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who employs all the shop hands, roundhouse employees, and many other men, was of the same opinion as Superintendent William B. McCaleb. He also referred to the fact that shops were not working full time, and that in order to take care of increased orders, men would work longer days. Numerous applicants call at the master mechanic's office daily for positions.

Robert H. Irons, General Superintendent of the Central Iron and Steel Company did not place much credit in the reports concerning a probable scarcity of labor. While more men would be needed, should orders increase, General Superintendent Irons was of the opinion that all the men needed could be had in this city and vicinity. He does not anticipate any labor famine.

Reports from the Employment Department of the Pennsylvania Steel Company were of a similar character. There has been no indication of a scarcity of men at Steelton. Daily applicants for positions at the big steel plant being numerous. It was said that conditions might cause a demand for skilled labor, but present indications were not favorable for a labor famine.

Officials of the Pipe and Pipe Bending Works said they are having no trouble "just now."
