

80 GLOBE EMPLOYEES PICNIC AT HERSHEY

Go to Park by Auto; Ball Game
Big Feature of Day

In automobiles the eight employees of the Globe store were taken to Hershey Park, immediately after the store closed for the weekly half holiday, where they spent the afternoon as the guests of Ben Strouse. Music for the occasion was furnished by the Globe orchestra.

Soon after the party landed at the park dinner was served. Afterwards games of skill and sport were indulged in. A feature was the baseball game between the Globe Right Posture team and the Hummelstown Juniors. Prizes were given those who excelled in the water races, dashes, broad jump and other feats of skill.

Committees in charge of the big success were: General—H. A. Plank, R. B. Robinson, W. A. Smith, F. Entry and John Och.

Publicity—H. E. Moyer and George Weaver.

Transportation—Leon Harris and R. B. Robinson.

Athletic—Like Rochman, John Ochs and Charles Cohen.

Refreshments—Sara Heiser, Bertha Baine, Cora Lebo, Florence Bankes, Maud Jobe and Thomas Thornley.

Music—F. Entry, Joseph Vlach, Thomas Thornley and E. Book.

Prize—Benjamin Strouse, H. A. Plank and Florence Bankes.

IN THE FAVORITE ONE-PIECE STYLE

A New Model With Yoke Effect.

By MAY MANTON

$720 Yoke Gown with Three-Piece Skirt 34 to 42 bust.

Every woman knows the value of the one-piece gown. This one is perfectly simple, adapted to every day needs, but it takes exceedingly smart lines and shows new features. The yoke is extended to form a vest that is most attractive and the full fronts mean becoming fullness. There is a three-piece skirt and the two can be joined by means of a belt to give the natural waist line or the skirt can be cut a little longer and arranged over the belt. Also there is a choice of two lengths for the sleeves and of open or high neck. Such a gown can be made from a great many different materials—from cotton, from linen, from wool or from silk and trimmed with anything that makes an effective contrast. In the picture, plain silk and cotton crepe is trimmed with a striped material to be most effective, and the gown is an excellent one for home wear or for the college woman's every day needs.

For the medium size will be needed 8 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 5 1/4 yds. 36, 4 1/2 yds. 44, with 1 yd. 27 for trimming. The skirt is 3 yds. and 6 in. wide at the lower edge.

The pattern No. 8720 is cut in sizes from 34 to 42 in. bust measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

SUBSTITUTE FOR LAWN MOWER

During the rush of summer work the lawn on the average farm is neglected. If the farmer wishes to keep his front yard neat and slightly purchase a couple of ewes in the Spring and let them run on the lawn to keep down the grass and weeds. Full-grown grade ewes will cost from $4 to $5 apiece. Grade Southdowns are particularly adapted as substitute lawn mowers, writes G. H. Dacy in Farm and Home.

The ewes will keep the lawn in order and also will increase its fertility as their droppings are very rich. If kept for a year they should produce a lamb apiece which will be worth eight to ten cents a pound when they top the 60-pound mark. The ewes will also shear five to six pounds of wool each.

The sheep will not require much care or attention except at lambing time when they must be well sheltered and fed. During the winter they relish corn fodder, clover hay, shelled corn, oats and bran. The ewes will more than pay their board bill. When fat they may be sold at a profit or they can be kept to care for the lawn the following season. An acre of good grass will support six mature ewes through the summer.

Helen woke the next morning with a sense of not remembering where she was. The sun was making little streaks of brilliance over the counterpane and some one was mowing the lawn, quite an unaccustomed sound and one that she could not connect with her surroundings. Then she remembered everything in a rush. She was dressed first, and, not waiting, ran lightly downstairs and out to the porch and the sweet-scented world. Little Mrs. Perkins was bending over a pansy bed examining the flowers closely. The man who had driven them up from the station was just finishing the lawn and said good morning to Helen as she went out into the sun, bare-headed.

Mrs. Perkins looked up with a pleasant smile as Helen came over and asked her if she couldn't help.

"Why, yes, you might," she vouchsafed, "take the watering pot and water the pink rosebush and the nasturtiums in the urn over by the side porch."

Helen seized the watering pot with alacrity and was busily tending to the flowers when Warren came out looking for her.

"Coming in to breakfast?" he asked.

"Yes," she said quickly, "in just one minute," and then as the last drop of water trickled out she put down the watering pot in the shade and followed Warren into the dining-room. Their table was spread near an open window overlooking the little porch where they had eaten last night, and which was now flooded with sunlight.

A rosy-cheeked country maid with dimples waited on them, and they enjoyed a real country breakfast of red raspberries with thick cream, oat-meal, newly-laid eggs, muffins, griddle cakes and the most delicious coffee Helen had ever tasted. With real interest she watched Warren eat the oatmeal.

At home he detested cereals and never ate any. She herself, although she liked them, never indulged, because of their fattening properties, but apparently the country air had already done wonders for Warren.

Afterward they wandered about the garden for a while, and then Mrs. Perkins called Helen and asked her if she would like a drive through the country.

"My husband is just leaving with some milk for the separator," she explained, and he would be glad to take you and Mr. Curtis."

Warren liked the idea, and they both watched the big cans being to the factory. She was really interested in watching the great white room with the big vats and the steaming smell of condensed milk.

She watched two men in clean white overalls lift the milk from the car and empty them one after another into the vats.

Then they drove away and out again into the country. They passed through a sleepy little village so heavily bowered in green that the houses looked almost buried. No one was about, and Helen was delighted with the atmosphere of rural solitude.

"I'd love to live in a country town," she said enthusiastically.

"You would for about one week," remarked Warren caustically.

"Why, Warren, what makes you say that? I am simply in love with the country."

"I am judging you by the past," he said in reply, "do you remember how you used to kick every time I mentioned going to the country for the summer? You always wanted to go to a hotel where you would have plenty of eyes to examine your clothes."

Helen flushed, she hoped the man in the front seat was not listening.

"I never knew what I was missing," strapped on the back of the little car. On the way Mr. Perkins explained the fact that they had no use for all their milk and sold a great deal to the factory, which was situated nearby.

The drive led through country roads. Prosperous farms stretched here and there at each side of the road. The mountains lay in a purple line against the far-distant sky. Helen felt exhilarated and took deep breaths of the sweet air. Warren talked to Mr. Perkins, and she heard them absent, but afterward she could not have spoken one word of what they said.

They turned in finally and drove up she said sweetly. "I will admit how awfully mistaken I was about the country now."

Helen knew that Warren would argue himself into a temper if she answered him at all, so she kept still and said nothing more till they were nearly home.

Warren apparently regretted his outburst, for he was first to make amends as he helped her out.

"How would you like me to read aloud for a while out of that new book you brought," he said.

"That would be nice, dear," she answered quickly. "I'll get it, and you go out and get a couple of chairs reserved."

"No, I'll get it," Warren returned. "I want to get some cigars anyway."

Helen went on out to the porch and was delighted to find the swing not taken. She drew a chair up close to the side and settled herself comfortably.

Warren came out in a few minutes, his face wreathed in smiles.

"Pretty decent chap that Perkins," he said good temperedly. "I just took him some cigars. This is the book, isn't it? Now for a quiet hour or so. This country life just suits me."

MAKING A FLYLESS NEIGHBORHOOD

A small amount of ordinary borax sprinkled daily on manure, will effectively prevent the breeding of the typhoid or house fly.

It is used at the rate of one pound to 12 bushels or .62 pounds to eight bushels, or ten cubic feet manure, or calcined Colemanite (crude calcium borate) at the rate of one pound to ten bushels. The method for using either substance in stables is to sprinkle it in the quantities given above, by means of a flour sifter or other fine sieve, around the outer edges of the pile of horse manure. The manure should then be sprinkled immediately with two or three gallons of water to eight bushels of manure, says Farm and Home.

It is essential to sprinkle a little of the borax on the manure as it is added daily to the pile, because this will prevent the eggs which the flies lay on fresh manure from hatching. As the fly maggots congregate at the outer edge of the manure pile, most of the borax should be sprinkled there.

A FINE MEAT JELLY

The value of partly ripe grapes for making one of the most delicate jellies is well known, but green grape sauce for meat is not as well known as it should be. Cook the grapes slowly in an enameled ware saucepan in preference to a metal pot which is not impervious to the action of fruit juices. When quite tender add sugar, a few whole cloves, a little stick of cinnamon and a quarter of a grated nutmeg. This will be found particularly good with pork or veal.

Best Treatment For Catarrh

S. S. S. Removes the Cause

Specialists in Catarrh troubles have agreed that it is an infection of the blood. The laboratories of the S. S. S. Co., at Atlanta, have proven it. Once you get your blood free from impurities—cleansed of the Catarrh poisons, which it is now a prey to because of its unhealthy state—then you will be relieved of Catarrh—the dripping in the throat, hawking and spitting, raw sores in the nostrils, and the disagreeable bad breath. It was caused, in the first place, because your impoverished blood was easily infected. Possibly a slight cold or contact with someone who had a cold. But the point is, don't suffer with Catarrh—it is not necessary. The remedy S. S. S., discovered over fifty years ago, tested, true and tried, is always obtainable at any drug store. It has proven its value in thousands of cases. It will do so in your case. Get S. S. S. at once and begin treatment. If yours is a long standing case, be sure to write the S. S. S. Co., Atlanta, Ga., for free expert medical advice. They will tell you how this purely vegetable blood tonic cleanses the impurities from the blood by literally washing it clean. They will prove to you that thousands of sufferers from Catarrh, after consistent treatment with S. S. S., have been freed from the trouble and all its disagreeable features and restored to perfect health and vigor. Don't delay the treatment. Take S. S. S. at once.
