

READY TO UNVEIL BIG MARKER TO CITY'S PROGRESS

Wonderful Story of Harrisburg's Fifteen Years of Improvements on Inscriptions JOHN HARRIS' LOG CABIN Boulder at Site of Ancient Ferry; Miss Walter and Cy Heckert to Dance

In the River Front Park just north of the formal entrance to Harrisburg at Market street is a big canvas-draped stone, ready and waiting for the twist of the unveiling strings that will mark the formal opening of Harrisburg's three-day municipal improvement celebration, Thursday, September 23.

The stone will be dedicated by the Chamber of Commerce to mark the completion of fifteen years of splendid public achievement.

Down in Harris Park, only a few hundred feet below the graveyard of John Harris, father of Harrisburg's founder, is a smaller boulder, canvas-covered and ready for the pulling of the unveiling strings.

The Ferry and the Cabin The stone marking the landing of Harris Ferry will be dedicated by the Pennsylvania Historical Commission to mark the landing.

Less than a hundred feet away is a tiny log cabin. That has been erected by the Red Men lodges in Harrisburg and will figure dramatically in the spectacle "The Burning of John Harris" which is to be a feature of the celebration.

All day to-day squads of youngsters tramped up and down the park under the supervision of Samuel P. Staugh, principal of Harris school, baugh, drilling for the school program. In other parts of town school children marched and wheeled and drilled and counter-marched and "dressed front" and so on.
